Gustavson Tells University Policies for Coming Year

BY JACK HILL.

"I came to Nebraska rather than going to several other institutions because I believe that in Nebraska there is opportunity to do the maximum in terms of education," said newly-appointed Chancellor Reuben G. Gustavson as he explained his reasons in taking over the chancellorship of the university. The Chancellor, a big, heavy-set man of commanding and friendly personality answered every question put to him in an open and frank manner.

Gustavson is a graduate of the University of Denver, receiving both his AB and MA degrees in chemistry. When asked what his interests had been in college, he smiled and explained that four outside jobs had kept him tied up as a janitor in a Denver high school, an ice cream delivery man, a newspaper writer and a washer of glasses in the chemistry labs and left him little time for extracurricular activities other than the chemistry club and the YMCA.

The Chancellor had a good laugh when asked about his part in athletics at Denver, and then said that he played semi-professional baseball while in Colorado which had made him ineligible.

He admitted that baseball was still his favorite sport and that he'd taken an active interest in intramurals.

That brought up the subject of athletics, and since the man came from a stronghold of de-emphasized sports, there were quite a few questions to be asked about the subject. As long there is no exploitation of athletes, Chancellor Gustavson is unqualifiedly behind the sports staff. He pointed out that of the 51 men now on the varsity football squad, 49 are natives of Nebraska and then underlined the healthy condition that this portends. Intramural programs will be given greater emphasis, but the athletic department will not be interfered with in any manner.

As to his relationship with the students, Gustavson voiced his hope that he will be able to continue the practice he has used at the University of Colorado and the University of Chicago. That is, to become acquainted with the students and to exchange ideas with them at every opportunity. It is the Chancellor's belief that there is more to college life than classroom experience. He referred to the everyday give and take between students as essential and expressed the theory that it would be very fine if students could arrange their work in such a way as to be finished by dinner time. This, he said, would leave the evenings free for discussions of every kind, which in turn, would serve as an enlightening influence on the lives of all the students.

There were still many things that we, as students, didn't know about the Chancellor. What were his over-all plans for the University in the future? How did he stand on the recently debated Big Six discrimination question?

Gustavson eased back in his chair and began to talk. He stated that Nebraska had a great tradition behind it but that there were several big jobs to do. The state must be convinced that the university is a necessary part of its operation and working on that realization, get solidly behind the administration, faculty and students.

A stronger faculty is needed and will be recruited with the aim of coming out of the present expansion program stronger than the university has ever been before. Referring to the building of the faculty, Gustavson said, "Teachers are human beings and the better salaries will command the better teachers." In that sense, an improvement of the finances of the university is called for, according to Gustavson. Along with this faculty expansion, a program of improved departmental housing must come about. "In particular, the engineering and education colleges are miserably housed," said Gustavson, "and this condition must be remedied as soon as possible."

The student health program will be re-organized on campus, with a complete infirmary for adequate medical care. Such a system will serve the two-fold purpose of furnishing the students with such care and also familiarizing them with medical procedure in order that such knowledge can then be taken to every part of the state. Here Gustavson paused and remarked, "The student of the university today is the potential leader of the state tomorrow."

It is the chancellor's desire that the University of Nebraska become integrated in a sense that students in the medical school and agricultural school themselves more a part of the entire college. One of his first steps, he said, will be to speak at all three of the campuses in an effort to impart a feeling of unity to the students.

In answer to the question of discriminatory practices in the Big Six, Chancellor Gustavson emphasized, "Negroes should have every opportunity that everyone else has." He feels that while college students are ahead of their elders in a lack of racial discrimination, such discrimination constitutes as serious threat to education as it now exists. "Those who preach a policy of any kind of racial prejudice, align themselves with Hitler," the Chancellor said.

He believes college political parties and discussion groups to be invaluable in education, as long as "these arguments and activities are kept on an objective and intellectual plane." The chancellor referred to the four years of college as being the most liberal and at the same time objective period in the American life. It should be kept at that, he said.

The interview was closed by the Chancellor with the expressed desire that he be thought of, not as a Chancellor who wishes to remain away from the students, but as a man interested in every student enrolled in the university and anxious to exchange ideas and thoughts with them all.
