

Cornhusker Staff Lists New Budget

BY DAKE NOVOTNY.

Unjustly accused of inflationary measures the Cornhusker staff has offered a plea for student leniency of judgment, coupled with cold hard facts, proving their innocence as personal instigators for higher yearbook prices.

The new yearbook will have more pages than last year's edition plus several colored pictures and a more expensive cover according to first hand information presented to me by business manager Dean Skokan.

It is hardly conceivable that any additional improvements can be made Skokan said without accompanying higher prices. Printing and engraving costs might be described as having sky-rocketed over estimates of previous years and consequently student individual pictures have risen proportionately the same as the resultant price of the book.

Class picture costs at Gold's studio are

$3.00 if the picture appears in one section.

$3.50 if the picture appears in two sections.

$4.75 if the picture appears in three sections.

Of this money the studio receives $1.00 for each sitting and a mounting fee of $1.50. An added cost of $.25 is charged for a glossy print suitable for engraving.

Appointments

Unaffiliated students may make class picture appointments by calling at the Cornhusker office. All organized houses, Greek and residence halls, will be given blanket appointment dates.

By a single process involving not too difficult mathematics it all adds up to this. At a cost of $5.50 to students the Cornhusker staff is offering a $9.00 publication which means that the difference must be made up by advertising rates, sale of pages to organizations and a charge for class pictures. Not one of these rates alone could sufficiently support the cost of the new edition, therefore an increase of 25% of all rates had to be made.

Only by doing this is it going to be possible for the new Cornhusker to be published with all the pomp and color of pre-war editions. Still in a critical state is the paper shortage which makes it possible to print only 3,000 copies of the annual. Selling dates have been set as Oct. 7 concluding Oct. 19th.

Architectural Division Shifts To Navy Hall

In keeping with the over-all expansion in numbers attending schools this fall, the Architectural department, located in the former Navy Hall, now to be called Architectural Hall, reports an increase in enrollment from 95 students to over 200 this semester.

Under the direction of Mr. Linus Burr Smith, chairman of the department of architecture the entire top floor of Architectural Hall has been renovated and a modern lighting system installed. To increase the availability of reference materials a library has been established and is now being supervised by Mrs. Marion Finke.

Rejoining the staff after Navy service are Marvin R. A. Johnson, Burket E. Graf, and Herman Skaret of the Lincoln firm of Skaret and Skaret.

As an immediate result of this unprecedented expansion there is a definite need for unobtainable drawing instruments, books, drafting tables, and stools. If anyone knows where any of these materials can be obtained, the Architectural department would appreciate notification.

Swindler Tells Improvement Plans for Journalism School

BY DICK TOOF.

Nebraska's Journalism department is now undergoing a process of general overhaul and repair, under the guidance of William F. Swindler, who assumed director-ment looks like this—first the "physical set-up" must be changed. Gloomy old University Hall, housing the school of journalism at the present time, has always been satisfactory. Mr. Swindler looks forward to the time when the School of Journalism moves to its new home, now represented by the large excavation immediately south of Bessey Hall. How soon? Mr. Swindler smiled and said that with the shortage of building material, neither he nor anyone else could tell. Until the new building is completed, lack of space limits enlargement of typing and photographic facilities.

Mr. Swindler had more than promises to offer. Expansion of the faculty, second point in his program of repair, is being carried out now, and this will permit expansion of the curriculum, third point in the program.

Two Purposes.

"I think that the school of journalism in a state university serves two fundamental purposes," stated Mr. Swindler, "first to select and train students who show aptitude and ability for professional journalism work, and second, to serve the journalistic industry of the state in the same way that an agricultural extension department serves the state's agriculture."

Ag Graduates Win $1,000 Fellowships

Recipients of the first two $1,000 Nathan J. Gold Research Fellowships are Francis A. Haskins, Republican City and M. L. Minthorn, Washington, D. C., Dean R. W. Goss of the Graduate College announced Tuesday.

Established with the University Foundation to stimulate research for the greater utilization of farm crops in industry the fellowships defray a portion of tuition costs.

Dean Goss stated that Mr. Minthorn's chemurgic research would be a study of the nature of the enzyme cellulose. This fundamental study, if successful, will pay the way for the use of "one of the greatest waste products of agriculture—cellulose," Dean Goss said. The "cellulose enzyme" reacts with cellulose products, like grain straw, alfalfa and corn stalks, in such a manner as to make them assimilable by both livestock and humans.

Enrollment Means Lines Everywhere

A glance at student enrollment figures this year seem to answer any questions as to why the Campus-line is so long, why parking spaces are at a premium and why one must wait hours to get a drink at the water fountain in Sosh hall.

Tuesday a. m. Dr. George W. Rosenlof, Director of Admissions, reported that the latest enrollment figures stood at 9,078 on the Lincoln campus, and 464 at the College of Medicine and School of Nursing in Omaha.

Unofficial Totals.

According to unofficial totals the freshman on the Lincoln campus boasts the largest enrollment, with 3,691 students. The sophomores follow with 1,690, juniors with 1,366, seniors with 872 and the Graduates and Professionals number 787. At the end of the list are 680 students with no class indicated.

Of the registration in different colleges, the College of Arts and Sciences seems to have come out on top with 2,547 students.

The reason so much is heard about accounting, shorthand and typing, is readily understood, for the College of Business Administration has a total of 1,547. Other figures stand today as follows: Engineering 1,520; Agriculture 1,029; Teachers 1,023; Graduate 477; Law 197; Pharmacy 162; Dentistry 113; Junior Division 148; 323 unclassified students have no college

The World war II veterans have definitely descended en masse on the campus this fall, with 5,780 now enrolled.

As the graduate college enrollment does not close until Oct. 9, and there are probably a few stragglers yet to register, Dr. Rosenlof said that final enrollment figures are expected to be slightly in excess of the present total.
