To Our Health . . .

Announcement of the reorganization of the Student Health Service and appointment of Dr. Samuel Fuenning as fulltime director comes as a pleasant surprise to the students, especially those who filled in the health questionnaires distributed nearly two years ago.

Whether or not those questionnaires and the report submitted to the faculty senate by the student council had anything to do with the changes we don't know, but most of the gripes that students voiced then are taken care of under the new plan for the health service.

The results of that survey showed that over half the students were dissatisfied with the health service, mainly because there was no full-time doctor on duty, no regular office hours and apparent lack of interest on the part of the staff as to student health. The other complaint voiced was in regard to the unpleasant atmosphere and unsanitary conditions in the health office.

After this report was submitted to the faculty senate, students waited impatiently for two months for the answer, which, when it came, promised "immediate action" and suggested surveys of other midwestern college health services.

Today the action was taken with the appointment of a full time doctor, in charge, and two other physicians added to the staff. Also, the department will be directly responsible to the College of Medicine in Omaha and under supervision of an advisory committee of medical college staff members.

Perhaps the brightest prospect for the health service is the possibility of obtaining a new building for the center. Best chances now are for an army officers barracks to be moved to the mall as temporary quarters. The army buildings are offered gratis to universities under a federal program and if Nebraska's application is approved, the building will be converted for use by the health service with 20 hospital beds on the second floor, and examining rooms, x-ray laboratory, minor surgical room and health service office on the first floor.

We don't know whom to thank for the move, but we'll start at the top and say "Thanks, Dr. Gus, for recognizing our needs and doing something about them." S. J.

tered adrenalin and took him out in the comparative fresh air of the hallway. As he lay on the floor regaining his breath, the journalist told me how the paper really works. First a reporter writes, re-writes and re-rewrites a story. Then he hands it to the managing editor. After she has made certain that his copy does not follow the style sheet (silly rules for punctuation, spelling, capitalization, etc.) she scribbles numbers on the story and hands it to a news editor. The news editor, an expert in the use of clothes, interprets the numbers and from them writes a headline which (a) doesn't fit; or (b) tells what the editor thinks should have been in the story.

At this point in the reporter's narrative we were interrupted as Sports Editor George Miller came toward the office dribbling a basketball with one hand and autographing girls' saddle shoes with the other.

When the sound of these bobby-soxers subsided, the scribe continued. After the managing editor has assigned a spot to each story on the make-up sheet, Jim Van Landingham roars into the room, stuffing ten dollar bills in his pockets, and commands that half of the copy must be thrown away so that he can enlighten the readers about the genuine muslin shirts with button down collars that can be obtained at Krouse's Better Bargain Basement for only $23.99.

The paper is then ready to go to the printers, but a news editor goes along to that office to insert a few more typographical errors. That was about all of scribbler's story, but he did exclaim, "Don't forget the editor's slogan, 'All the news that fits we print.'" his master in June, is now an assistant instructor on the school of music faculty.

The concert, under the direction of Conductor Emanuel Wishnow, is open free to the public. Altho a capacity audience filled the Union ballroom for the orchestra's last concert in December, for which admission cards were necessary, attendance at Sunday's concert will not require an admission card.

In addition to a traveling schedule that will take the organization for concerts throuth the state, the orchestra will make six campus appearances during the remainder of the year. It will provide orchestral parts for the opera performance in February and the spring oratorio in April, and will give two concerts in May, one in April as well as its annual Sprint Concert.
