Dear Editor:

In regards to your article on the veterans' view of education in yesterday's paper, I would like to add an opinion you omitted. Mr. Vincour also stated that most veterans object to the "mummified attitude of the instructors." It is my opinion, however, that it is not the instructors—who are usually young and progressive—but the professors, department heads, and deans who are the ones who usually have a mummified attitude. They are the ones responsible for subject matter being twenty or thirty years behind times. They are the ones who cling to the old-fashioned methods of memorizing the notes, giving quizzes to see how good your memory is, and grading accordingly—never bothering to find out if a student is learning anything or whether or not he can think. They are also the ones who act as our moral guardians and watch over us to see that no evil befalls their charges. The only trouble is that they are usually so narrow-minded that the atmosphere they would like to see would be free of alcohol, tobacco, and sex.

Here are a few changes I would recommend: More group discussion in classes; at least one period a month set aside to discuss some current event (not necessarily on the subject matter of the course); discussion questions on tests that require more thought and less memorizing; a more concentrated presentation of subject matter; some way of testing professors to make sure they are keeping up with the latest information and methods; abolish the seniority system of advancement—give appointments for what they know, not because they have been here longer or happen to be "in" with the right people; give the students a positive voice in their government—not just a board to enable a student to get activity points; and above all, keep biased opinions and old-fashioned narrow-mindedness out of the class-room.

Sincerely,
ROBERT L. RUBY.

N Club Votes To Eliminate ROTC Rifle Team Letter

Will Christen "Nebraskan" Burlington Train of Tomorrow in Omaha Festivities Saturday

At a luncheon meeting of the N Club held Thursday noon, members voted to amend their constitution with regard to awarding letters to competitors on the ROTC rifle team. It was decided that no more letters would be given for participation in the event.

Fred Metheny presented the argument against the rifle team letter. He pointed out that, since the activity was open only to ROTC members, all students did not have an equal chance to compete for the team.

Colonel John Speaks

Colonel John of the ROTC was a guest and spoke on behalf of the rifle team members. He mentioned the fact that the rifle team in the past has brought much credit to the university and that it required much effort on the part of the individual participant to make the team. "I believe that the letter is a just reward to members of the team and it encourages competition," stated Colonel John.

The group expressed the opinion that, if rifle team competition was opened to all students, some further action would be taken regarding the situation.

Christen "Nebraskan"

It was announced that the N Club would make the trip to Omaha Saturday for the purpose of christening the "Nebraskan," Burlington's "train of tomorrow." Dick Thompson, president of the club, will do the official honors. Approximately 45 members plan to attend.

Eddie Schwartzkopf was introduced as the chairman of the initiation committee which is slated to go into action in the near future. Schwartzkopf announced that approximately 50 men were eligible for membership in the club. Legislation was introduced regarding the use of boards on new initiates and the group expressed favor for their use. Tom Noyak presented reasons why the practice should be continued.

The approaching N Club dance was discussed and Jerry Jacupke was appointed chairman of the planning committee for the affair. Other members of the committee will be appointed by the new chairman.
