

UN Athletic Facilities Grow; Will Add New Sports Arena

An army surplus sports arena located at Camp Crowder, Mo., has been allocated to the University of Nebraska to relieve crowded conditions in the coliseum, Sen. Kenneth Wherry announced to university officials today.

The main floor of the new building is only 20 feet shorter and 2 feet less wide than the present floor space in the coliseum. Actual floor space in the new building is 180 feet long by 100 feet wide, as compared with the coliseum floor space which is 200 feet long by 100 feet wide. Overall dimensions of the structure are 200 feet long, 131 feet wide and 30 feet high at the peak of the roof.

Plan Assembly 1948.

The building is now being dismantled and will be reassembled on the Nebraska campus early in 1948 north of the new Military Science building and will face 14th street. It will be a semi-permanent structure and the University plans to face it with brick veneer. The entire cost of construction will be borne by the Federal Works Agency, L. F. Seaton, university operating superintendent, said.

L. E. Means, director of intramural athletics, said Thursday that with the rapid growth of the intramural and recreational program which is reaching so many students, the added space is a boon to the university.

Mixed Classes.

"Classes for both men and women students in theory courses which were impossible in the coliseum where the dressing rooms are in the basement with class rooms, will now be possible in the new building," Means said.

There will be space for three basketball courts, several handball courts, and a boxing and wrestling ring. Six class rooms and six faculty offices as well as showers and lockerrooms will be located in the building.

If used as an auditorium, it is estimated that the building would comfortably seat about 5,000 persons.

One room of the new building will be developed as a laboratory where experimentation and research along several lines is planned, especially in health and the physiology of exercise, Means said.
