McWilliams, Today's Convo Speaker, to Discuss Racism

Carey McWilliams, young Californian who will address an all-university convocation at 11 a.m. in the Union this morning, is one of the leading authorities in the country on the history of racial minorities in the United States, the causes of race conflict.

Special interest in McWilliams' talk "Organized Racism—A Threat to Democracy" is afforded in view of the recent Big Six Anti-Discrimination conference held last Saturday on the campus and sponsored by the Student Council.

Twice-awarded Guggenheim Fellowships, McWilliams has been on the staff of The Nation as an editor since 1945. He is a frequent contributor to The North American Review, The Atlantic Monthly, Harper's and The New Republic.

He is the author of Southern California Country, an intense study of the factors that make up one segment of our country.

To McWilliams, the treatment of racial minorities in the United States is not merely a domestic problem but has far reaching international repercussions.

Scientific Fact.

Urging the necessity for establishing a new policy on minorities, McWilliams says that it must be based on scientific fact and not upon a "miscellaneous collection of old wives' tales and superstitions," and must also be based upon the American conception of citizenship. The author of "Brothers Under the Skin" and other outspoken books on the subject of minorities' rights points out that the scientific facts show that there are no pure races in the world; that people differ only slightly biologically; that there is no superior or inferior race; and there is no correlation between race and culture.

The problems of racial minorities in this country have been given impetus by the war, McWilliams says. There has been a noteworthy geographical change in the distribution of minority races, that racial minorities made significant economic gains during World War II because of the "total" war effort needed in the struggle, and also because of the new concepts gained by members of the minority groups in their services with the armed forces.

Ominous Signs.

Ominous signs today, according to McWilliams, are the renewal of the Ku Klux Klan, and renewed attacks of violence upon Negroes which have gone completely unpunished. One of the threats to democracy, he warns, will be made thru power politics utilized by demagogues.

"In the atomic age," McWilliams says, "The only real security we have is the ability to create good will among the peoples of other countries." He advocates the cultivation of readiness of human relations internationally. He urges the establishment of a human relations council every community to better racial conditions.

"It is not racial difference that is the problem," he says, "But it is what people are led to believe about it."

Christmas Seal Sale Campaign Opens Today

The Tuberculosis Christmas Seal Campaign, carried on by the Tassels, to help raise funds for the prevention and cure of tuberculosis, will open on campus Wednesday, December 3. The drive will continue until December 10.

The sale of TB seals was inaugurated last year in order to buy a mobile X-ray unit for Lancaster County to be available for student X-rays each year. In the past the university borrowed the mobile unit from the Nebraska state health department.

Representatives from Tassels will collect contributions from organized and unorganized houses, and seals will be sold at a booth in the union.

To stimulate donations, a plaque will be placed in the Union with the names of organizations whose members contributed 100 per cent with a $1.00 donation from each person.

Proceeds from the sale of these stamps pay for the X-rays students take each fall.

1500 Copies Of Directory Sold First Day

Over 1,500 copies of the Student Directory were sold the first day of the sale yesterday. Gene Mitchell, business manager of the book, said, "A thousand directories were sold Monday night at organized houses. The sales will continue for only two weeks, so everyone should get their copy now."

The Directory is published annually by the Student Foundation. It contains the name, address, phone number, college year, school, and home address of every registered university student. It also contains a special organized house section with a complete list of house members.

The book is selling for 50 cents. Barbara Turk, editor of the Directory, stated, "We are selling the Student Directory to students below cost this year. As a service organization, the Student Foundation feels that the price should be kept down."

The pocket-size book can be purchased at the Student Union; Social Science and Law buildings; Ag campus; the Nebraska, Co-op, and Regents' book stores; the Graves Printing Co.; and at all organized houses.

President of the Student Foundation, Lorraine Landeryou, remarked, "Through the co-operation of workers and board members of the Foundation we have turned out a good-looking, useful Directory. It is the best Student Directory that we have offered to U. of N. students."
