Friedrich Says Allied Policy In Germany Bogged Down

tablishment of democracy, Dr. Friedrich of Harvard University, said here Monday night.

An authority on European politics, Dr. Fredrich addressed the first of three public lecture audiences being held in Love Library auditorium on the University campus this week. His lectures are part of a number of appearances on the campus which he will make as first recipient of satisfactorily, but that our policy the university's Montgomery Lec-tureship on Contemporary Civilization.

Dr. Friedrich pointed to three principal reasons why the whole occupational program of the Al-lied Control Council is currently bogged down:

(1) The orginal program for occupying Germany—demilitariza-tion, denazification, deindustrial-ization, decentralization and democratization—remains in effect somewhat as originally planned by the victorious allied powers in 1945. But the program is "unrealistic" since assumed nothing had happened in Germany between 1939 and 1945. Inadequate attention was given the problem of devastation of the German industrial plant from air warfare, and the problem resulting from Fredrickson, bassoon. manpower losses.

Addressing the veteran students, Walker reported that during the crucial period he spoke to three of Nebraska's four representatives, Stefan, Curtis and Miller, who expressed themselves in favoring a "reasonable increase." The Meade bill provided for an in-crease to $75 for single veterans and to $105 for married veterans. The current subsistant rates for single and married veterans are $65 and $90, respectively

The group reconvened and re-affirmed their support of the Meade Bill, to come up again the regular session of Congress, and went on record as favoring amendments calling for an in-crease of $35 for both married and single students over the current amounts and the payment of $10 for each dependant. The fact that the organization established in Washington at the conference will continue to function until the veterans' demands were met was pointed out by Walker, who concluded by plead-ing with those present, and those not present, to write their rep-resentatives urging them to pass legislation increasing subsistance.
