Records Expected to Fall In Big Seven Swim Meet

In the coming Big Seven Swimming Championships, to be held in the Nebraska pool this Friday and Saturday, the record which seems to be the surest to be broken is the 150-yard backstroke. Two men are already under it and four others are right above the record time, which is 1:45.5, set by Les Oldfield of Nebraska in 1941. Oldfield was Nebraska's top backstroker last year, but he is not back this year.

Robison Leads

Leading the field is Doug Robison of Iowa State with a time of 1:40.1, follewed closely by his teammate Alan Thompson, who has a time of 1:40.4. Bob Wyant of Iowa State is in the number three slot with a time of 1:46.5.

Oklahoma has the next place with Elcin Crowder swimming the event in 1:46.6, Crowder touched out Bill Fenton of Nebraska in a dual meet between the two schols. Fenton's best time is played. 1:48.7. He came out late in the season and is just beginning to round into shape.

Breast Stroke Record May Fall The conference record in the 200-yard breast-stroke event is also expected to fall, two men already having beaten the present record of 2:33.4. Dick Nielson and Howard Johnson, both of Iowa State, are under the mark with times of 2:29.0 and 2:31.8 respectively. The Cyclones number three man is right above the record time with 2:35.7.

Stan Jervis of Kansas and Conrad King of Nebraska are next in line with times of 2:36.4 and 2:38.5 respectively. These two should give the Cyclone number three man a good race for the third place position.
