Vote Twice This Week . . .

This week, there are two elections which will be of interest to university students.

The first, Tuesday, is of nation-wide importance. It is the Nebraska preferential primary. At the same time, voters will choose nominees for Congressional, state and local officers.

Students of voting age should feel obligated to cast their votes in this election which will guide Nebraska's delegates in helping to select a presidential nominee at the Republican national convention next summer.

While Nebraska's 15 delegates will not be bound to vote at the convention for the winner of this "all-star" primary, it will serve as a guide to them. It is also being looked on by the entire country as an important indication of political feeling in the Mid-west.

This primary gives students an opportunity to express their opinions in national affairs. Students on this campus have had an unusual opportunity in the last week to observe and hear speak three of the leading contenders for the presidential nomination. This should be an added incentive for a large student vote at the primary. If a student favors a particular candidate and would like to cast his vote for him next November in the presidential election, he should express that preference now!

The second election this week in which all university students should participate is solely of campus interest—the annual Spring election of next year's student council members. It is needless to say that every student should be interested in future members of the student governing body for it is that group that will be setting the pace of campus activity. It is apparent that student interest in campus activity has picked up from the apathetic attitude in the past few years. This was indicated in the last two weeks by a record number of filings for council posts.

Students have the chance next Thursday to go to the polls and express any criticisms or suggestions for the student council by voting for the individuals they believe will give them the student government they want.

University Students Vote Today in State Primary

Those University students eligible will vote today in the state primary elections. The most important issues on the ballot will be the Republican and Democratic elections for representatives to the national conventions.

The balloting will open at 8 a.m. and close at 8 p.m.

Closest polling places for student voters will be the Lincoln City Hall and The Church of the Four Square Gospel at 1519 Q.
