

More Pioneering . . .

It is fitting that Dr. Harold Sheely Diehl, principle speaker at Thursday's convocation honoring the University student health service, is a pioneer in the field of good health for college students.

Pioneering has been the key phrase in the advances in student medical care which have been made at Nebraska. A lengthy chain of improvements have occurred since the first student health organization was set up in 1919.

From that one-doctor service, the school has developed a program of facilities and physicians to the point where complete medical care is now available to all students. This present peak is not the end of the trail even though it marks a high point in the rise of the student health program on the campus.

More pioneering for the student health organization has been predicted by Dr. Samuel I. Fuenning, director of the student health center. A permanent building more completely equipped than the present temporary structure is high on the list of must's as listed by Dr. Fuenning.

Student health has been an increasingly important phase of University operation in recent years and it is encouraging to report that the University of Nebraska can point to a full scale program which provides students with complete medical care.

Dr. Fuenning summed up the University attitude quite aptly when he said that a man in poor health after he graduates is no asset either to his community or to his profession. Similarly, a student in poor health is no asset to the school and is not able to do justice to his educational program.

C. H. Patterson Speaks at Chem Society Meeting

"As scientists and specialists in a democracy, we must be prepared to play a double role: that of being specialists and that of also being human beings in society," said Dr. Charles H. Patterson in his speech, "The Moral Responsibilities of the Scientist," given at a meeting of the Chemical Engineering society Wednesday, April 14.

"Under a totalitarian state all scientists must be in harmony with the state, but in a democracy there can be no such restraint. They are free to have a healthy curiosity of what nature is doing," Dr. Patterson said.

The philosophy professor went on to say that there are two alternatives as to what should be done with scientific information: first is to let someone other than the scientist do the social planning, and second is to let all run society and not just a group of experts. The skill of correct and logical thinking should not only solve scientific problems but should be transferred to the field of social relations. In conclusion Dr. Patterson stated that "a democracy is a faith that we won't make a failure in governing ourselves."

In the business meeting preceding the speech, Warren Koenig was awarded the AICHE annual chapter scholarship award. Paul Sonderegger gave a report on the seniors' inspection trip and Engineers' Week and the Blue Print were discussed.

The Baptist Student Fellowship will meet at the Baptist Student House, 315 North 15th, at 5:30 p. m. The devotional service will begin at 6:30 and the Rev. Carroll Lemon, executive secretary of the Nebraska Council of Churches, will be the guest speaker.
