Band Routine Complicated By Married Members' Wives

From the precision of its marching exhibitions, one would never guess what extent of internal complications plague the ROTC varsity band, and its director, Donald Lentz. Running a band organization of nearly 120 pieces is never a picnic, but an unexpected post-war situation has troubled Director Lentz during this year.

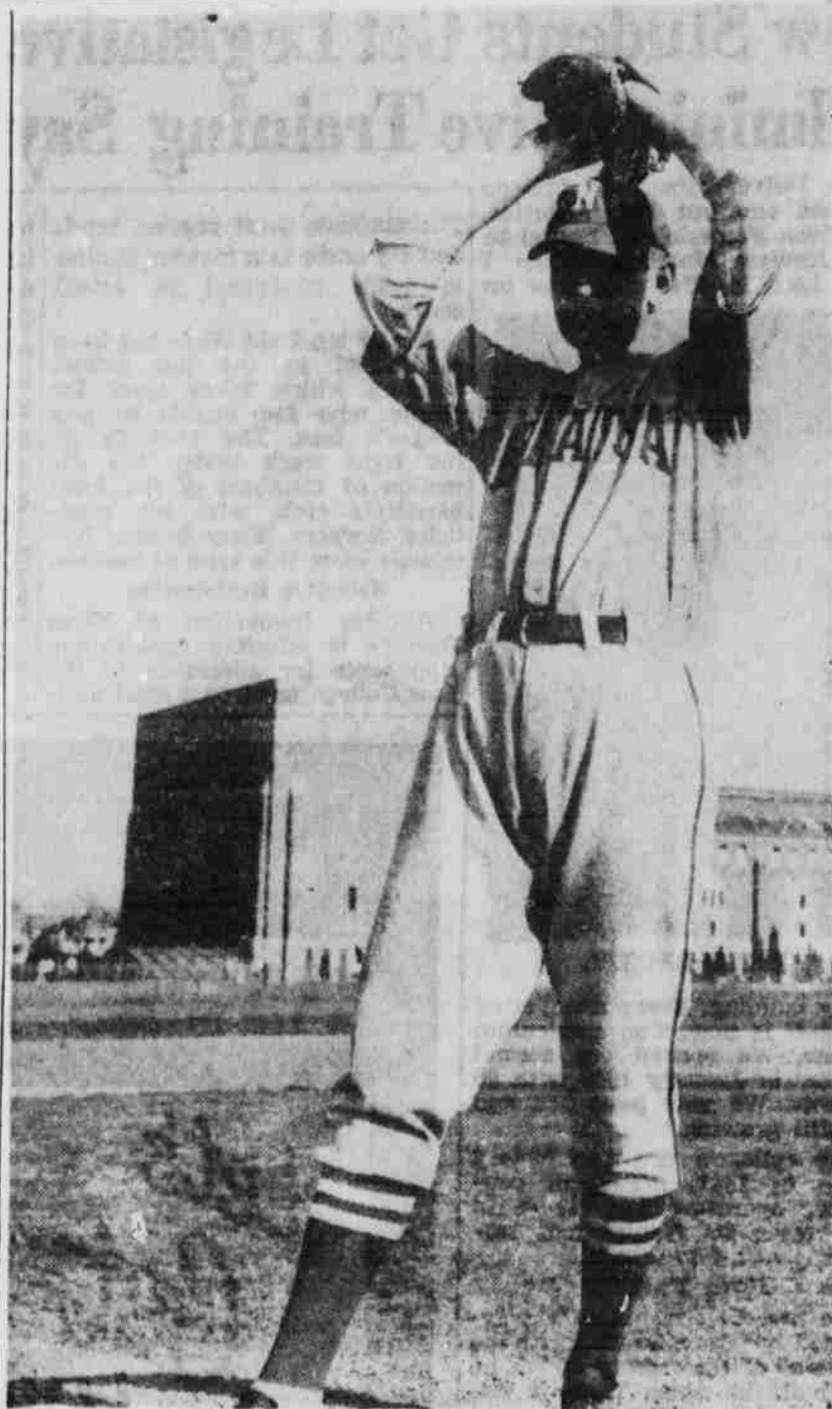

The difficulty is, namely, married men! The main alteration made in band life by the membership of nine married men (and one married woman) crops up in rehearsals regularly. Meeting three days a week at 5 p. m. on the third floor of the Temple building, the band often practices past the 6 o'clock bell.

And therein comes the rub. It seems that the "little wimmin" at home have an idea that their instrument playing husbands ought to sit down at the supper table at just about 6, and resent the intrusion of a band schedule on the domestic schedule!

For having to dismiss rehearsals promptly when he feels a few phrases need going over again, Lentz compensates in this way. Whenever the band takes a trip, such as the student migration to Missouri last fall, he assumes that married men are men of responsibility—and makes them the advanced guard in charge of baggage! This, Lentz figures, will relieve worried wives about the chance for their husbands to cut loose.

Altho about three engaged band couples—mostly seniors, are planning a marching episode all their own, come the last rehearsal and June 7th, there is only one married couple now in the band. The duo is Cleo and Paul Austin, whose equally masculine-sounding first names caused some confusion. See Band, Page 8, Col. 1

JIM SANDSTEDT, Varsity pitcher from Omaha, who will take the mound in the Huskers-Missouri opening game.
