Extinct Animal Info Sought By Museum

The University Museum will seek information in southwest Nebraska this summer about rhinos, elephants and other animals which became extinct just prior to the Ice Age a million years ago.

Dr. C. B. Schultz, museum director, said three field parties are now at work excavating fossils. Two of the parties are working in the site of the Medicine Creek reservoir north of Cambridge, and one at the site of the proposed Harlan county reservoir.

Both reservoir sites contain fossil beds which may yield important information on animal life in Nebraska covering the period from 20,000 years ago to over 1,500,000 years ago, Dr. Schultz said. This evidence will be destroyed when the reservoirs are filled with water.

The summer work will be directed by Dr. Schultz and Dr. W. D. Frankforter of the museum staff. Dr. G. C. Lueninghoener of Midland college will act as consultant in geology. Field party members in the Medicine Creek area, all university students, are: Loren M. Toohey, Scott Cast, Gregory Elias and Jerry Folsom, all of Lincoln, Bob Ebel, Falls City, Ross McIntyre, Omaha, Robert Truxell, Genoa, and Lyle Plugge, Arlington. Harlan reservoir field party members are Allen Graffham, Lincoln, and Maurice Mendenhall, Wray, Colo.

United Nations Display Goes to Huston, Tex.

Leaving the university campus this week is the United Nations famous display which has been housed in Love Memorial Library for the past two weeks.

The exhibit, which is being packed today, will be shipped to Huston, Tex., where it will be put on display.

6,000 Observe.
More than 6,000 people went through the exhibit since it put up in the library. It was ranged so as to tell the story how the United Nations started, how it functions, and something about life in all the 54 member nations of the UN. "Know Your UN" has been the theme of the exhibit. It was brought to this campus through a gift to the university foundations from the Lincoln newspapers.

"The U.N. exhibit has been exceedingly well received by summer school students and the general public," Dr. Frank Sorenson, director said. "Many civic and religious groups have fit their observances of the display into their teaching programs."

Frist Phase.
The display was the first phase of the broad program designed to make Nebraska citizens informed about the United Nations. The program planned includes UN courses for school children and college students; teaching materials for school and college instructors and programs for communities. This is an educational experiment which the UN hopes to make the basis for an international educational program about its aims, ideals and accomplishments. The experiment is to try to correct the false idea of many Americans that the United Nations is a far-away and vague thing.

Nebraska Had 'Rough Riders' In War Once

You have heard of Teddy Roosevelt's rough riders, but did you know that Nebraska had its own "rough riders" in the Spanish-American War? They were a part of Grigsby's Cowboys, a colorful western regiment in the war with Spain, and while they didn't do much riding, it wasn't their fault. They were ready.

The story of these Nebraskans is told by Dr. J. R. Johnson, Professor of History at Wayne State Teachers College, in the June issue of Nebraska History, just published by the State Historical Society.

In the same issue, Dr. Edward Everett Dale, nationally famous Research Professor of American History in the University of Oklahoma, writes an article on, "Wood and Water: Twin Problems of the Prairie Plains." His article is illustrated by pictures of Nebraska sod houses from the Historical Society's Butcher Collection, the largest of its kind in the country.

Rounding out the articles in the June number are: "Early Education in Nebraska," by Helen Siampos, and the final installment of the Life of John M. Thayer by Earl G. Curtis, Miss Siampos is a senior at Doane College, and her article originally was written as an assignment for one of the history classes of Professor John Brenneman. Mr. Curtis is a business man at Minatone.

THE BUILDER
Alan Ladd, upon completion of his starring role in Paramount's "The Great Gatsby," went to work with three carpenters and helped on the actual building of his new California ranch home.
