

Roscoe Pound Receives Law Survey Dedication

In recognition of his distinguished services to the cause of law reform at home and abroad, the 1947 volume of the Annual Survey of American Law, written and published by the faculty of the New York University school of law, was dedicated last night to Dean Emeritus Roscoe Pound of Harvard university law school.

A native of Lincoln, Dean Pound was born Oct. 27, 1870. Admitted to Nebraska bar in 1890, he practiced at Lincoln from 1890 to 1901. An assistant professor of law at the University of Nebraska from 1899 to 1903, Pound was dean of Nebraska's law school from 1903 to 1907.

The dedication was made by Judge Arthur T. Vanderbilt, retiring dean of the New York university school of law at the dedication dinner of the 1947 annual survey at the Lotos club, 5 East 66th street, New York City. Judge Vanderbilt retires as dean on September 1st to assume the first chief justiceship of the New Jersey supreme court under that state's new constitution on September 15th.

Faculty Attend.

The dedication dinner was attended by the entire faculty of the law school, most of whom had contributed articles to the Survey. Professor Sidney Post Simpson of the law school's faculty, formerly professor of law at Harvard university, represented Dean Pound at the ceremonies and read Dean Pound's acceptance speech. Dean Pound is now in China where he is charged with the task of re-writing the laws of China, as ad-

The 1947 volume in its dedication recognizes Dean Pound as "the Schoolmaster of the American bar and the founder of the school of sociological jurisprudence." The volume is 1,245 pages in length, of which 1,145 pages consist of articles under the major headings of: General Public Law; Social, Business, and Labor Regulations; Trial Law; Adjective Law; and Legal Philosophy, History and Reform. 100 pages of the volume are allowed for tables of contents, cases, statutes and a topical index. A total of 47 authors collaborated in preparing the volume.

The Annual Survey of American Law, instituted as a major publication of the New York university school of law in 1942 by Dean Vanderbilt and his colleagues on the faculty, has been dedicated annually since then "to that member or members of the legal profession who in the opinion of the contributors to the survey made the greatest contribution to the development of the law in the year covered by the book."

The 1942 volume was dedicated to Chancellor Harry Woodburn Chase of New York university; the 1943 edition to Dean emeritus Frank H. Sommer, Dean Vanderbilt's predecessor in office; the 1944 issue to the Honorable Manley O. Hudson, judge of the permanent court of international justice; the 1945 volume to Honorable Carl McFarland, draftsman of the federal administrative procedure act; and the 1946 issue was jointly dedicated to the Honorable Robert M. LaFollette, jr., former United States senator from Wisconsin, the Honorable A. S. Mike Monroney, congressman from Oklahoma and Dr. George B. Galloway, staff director of the joint committee on the organization of congress, for their work in the enactment of the legal reorganization act of 1946.

Dean Pound, prior to leaving this country for his duties in China, wrote and published a comprehensive review of the 1942 through 1946 volumes of the annual survey, which was printed in four successive issues of the American Bar association's journal this past year.

UN Officer Claims Andrei Gromyko Not Really as Sour as Appearances

Next time you see Andrei Gromyko in the news reels you can boo him if you want to, but it would make about as much sense as hissing Charles Laughton for playing the villain in the feature picture.

For Andrei Gromyko, according to Dr. William Agar, is not such a mean man — personally. And Dr. Agar ought to know. He's the United Nations educational liaison officer who completed a two-day appearance on the University of Nebraska campus Tuesday.

Gromyko Not Dour

"Gromyko," said Dr. Agar in a lecture at Love Library Tuesday morning, "isn't the dour person that photographs would lead you to believe. Nor is he the dour person that you would suspect when you see him speak — he scowls and frowns.

"As a matter of fact, at the close of an official session I have seen him in sociable groups where he talks and acts like a perfectly rational and reasonable human being," Dr. Agar reported.

And Gromyko speaks very good English, Dr. Agar said, though he sticks to Russian for official utterances.

He explained that Gromyko, until his recent removal from UN, was duty bound, like all security council representatives, to carry out the instructions and policies of his home government when acting officially.

Oath of Allegiance

That pattern of conduct, however, does not apply to members of the UN's secretariat, the international civil servants who comprise the working framework of the UN organization, Dr. Agar said. When they join the UN's staff they do not lose their citizenship but they take an oath of allegiance to support their boss — the UN.

Dr. Agar, the second speaker from Lake Success to come to Nebraska for the university's continuing summer clinic on UN, was the guest of the Nebraska Education Association at a luncheon Tuesday noon at the University Club. He left Lincoln by plane later in the day to return to his post with the UN's information division.

On Monday Dr. Agar said that the United Nations in two brief years has already chalked up some encouraging successes and deserves the support of all thoughtful citizens.

Progress Brought

"In Palestine," Dr. Agar pointed out, "the efforts of the United Nations have brought a measure of progress on a problem that for years has confounded Great Britain, the United States, and other national powers.

"At least UN has stopped the fighting," he added, "and there is hope that the way will continue to remain open for negotiation. This is a worthwhile achievement."

One great difficulty the UN has, Dr. Agar said, is to make people understand that it is something more than a security council.

"The security council is only one small part of the United Nations. It happens to be the place where conflict is sometimes visible, and therefore it gets considerable attention," he explained.

To Prevent Aggression

The council, he reminded, has the prime job of preventing aggression — the "hot wars." But the UN, as a whole, has the less glamorous, but perhaps more important job of removing the causes of war.

Such agencies as the commission on human rights, the economic council, and the World Health organization have made very significant progress — progress that in many instances has passed almost unnoticed.

Final Coliseum Concert Closes All-State Clinic

The University of Nebraska's All-State High School Course in Music, Speech and Dramatic Art came to a close this week with a series of public performances.

The concerts were designed to show the accomplishments of 198 high school youngsters who have been on the campus for three weeks of intensive instruction in the fine arts.

Sunday at 3 p. m. the orchestra, conducted by Prof. Emanuel Wishnow, was heard Monday when speech students presented several one act plays. Tuesday the band, directed by Walter Olsen, director of music in the Fremont public schools, gave a concert. Wednesday there was a debate contest, and the same day the final one-act plays were given. All were in the Student Union ballroom.

Thursday the entire group attended the annual All-State banquet at the Student Union, and then presented at 7:30 p. m. in the Coliseum the final concert which included the band, orchestra, chorus and speech students in a 90 minute performance.

New Phys. Ed. Fieldhouse Officially Turned Over to UN

The University of Nebraska's new physical education fieldhouse was officially turned over to the institution Wednesday by the Federal Works Agency.

H. L. Reppart of Kansas City, construction chief for the FWA community facilities bureau, presented title to the rebuilt structure to John K. Selleck, university business manager, at ceremonies on the campus.

Attending

Others attending the transfer ceremonies included: C. H. Smith, Omaha, district engineer, FWA; Ed Moser, Fremont, field superintendent; Francis R. Orshek, Inc., Fremont, contractor; Harry E.

formances by the All-State chorus, directed by David Foltz; the All-State band, directed by Walter Olson; and the All-State orchestra directed by Emanuel Wishnow.

The concert was presented in the colorful setting in the coliseum which carried the United Nations theme of this year's course.

The youngsters attending the course were especially selected from a large list of applicants. While on the campus they get both individual and group instruction from the university faculty members. The course fee is $65 which includes room, meals, medical care and tuition.

Pavey, job supt.; C. C. Fowler, university supt. of building and grounds; Noel Smith university maintenance engineer and Jake Small, university heating engineer.

The building, formerly an athletic arena at Camp Crowder, Mo., is located in the northeast corner of the campus near the coliseum. It is a large frame building covered with brick veneer and trimmed in bedford stone. The inside over-all dimensions are 201 feet long and 130 feet wide, and the playing space is just slightly smaller than the coliseum floor.

Building's Use

The new building will be used for physical education classes and intramural sports.

Completion of the athletic building completes the FWA program at the university under which 77,500 square feet of classroom, laboratory, library and health center space was added to the institution's facilities. The transfer of the university building, one of the largest FWA projects in the midwest, also completes the FWA program in the state. This included construction of 114,380 feet of floor space from army surplus buildings at Creighton, Hastings, Nebraska Wesleyan, Kearney Normal and the Milford state trade school.

Geologist Leaves For European Fossil Studies

T. M. Stout, University of Nebraska geologist, left the campus Tuesday for Europe where he will study in French and British museums fossil specimens similar to those found in Nebraska.

While overseas, Mr. Stout will also attend the International Zoological Congress in Paris July 21-27, and the International Geological Congress in London Aug. 25-Sept. 1, the latter as official delegate of the university. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Stout. They will return to Lincoln about Sept. 15.
