

VA Cautions Recreational Courses Out

The veterans administration has cautioned World War II veterans planning to train under the GI bill that a new federal law prohibits the VA from paying the costs of any courses which are determined to be avocational or recreational in nature.

The recently enacted law applied to educational and training courses commenced or re-commenced by veterans after June 30, according to Ashley Westmoreland, Lincoln VA regional office manager. Veterans who commenced or re-commenced training prior to July 1 in courses affected by the new law will be permitted to complete their training.

List Doubtful Courses. Certain courses in dancing, photography, glider training, personality development, entertainment, instrumental and vocal music, public speaking, sports and athletics, and any single subject course which is not a part of a general program leading to an educational or employment objective, are included in the list of training determined by the VA to be avocational or recreational in character.

If a veteran wants training in any of the courses considered by VA to be avocational or recreational he must submit to the VA complete justification that the course he wants is in connection with his present or contemplated business or occupation, and prior approval of the VA must be obtained.

Flight Training Okayed.

The new law stipulates that flight training and related aviation courses a veteran may take in connection with his present or contemplated business or occupation shall not be considered avocational or recreational.

Flight courses elected by a veteran at an approved school will not be considered avocational or recreational if the veteran submits evidence prior to the start of training that the course is occupationally connected, and that he is physically qualified to obtain the type of license which will enable him to attain his employment objective.

These Studies Approved.

Courses not generally considered by VA to be avocational or recreational include approved institutional on-farm training and apprenticeships training; courses of education in approved schools for which credit is granted toward an educational objective; courses of vocational training in approved schools, approved courses in on-the-job training and courses in applied music, physical education and public speaking offered by institutions of higher learning as an integral part of a course leading to an educational objective.
