Pharmacists May Work In Research

Students interested in becoming pharmacists or druggists will find their training in the College of Pharmacy both practical and scientific.

Training for general drug store work will be of the practical type, while the training for those with an eye to advance study and eventual research falls under the scientific category.

Though the elementary program of study is the same for both types for the first three years, the student should seriously consider which program he wishes to enter.

When he has completed the requisite work, the student is admitted to the actual specialized study his junior year, on basis of his previous scholarship.

The medicinal garden, one of the more interesting features of the pharmacy college, is used for both teaching and experimental purposes.
