Parking Situation Will Improve in 1948-49 With Addition of Over 400 Stalls on Campus

There's a new car parking setup on the campus this fall, which has two main parts to it:

(1) There are now 1,400 parking stalls on campus streets and other trafficways, and in the official parking lots adjacent to the campus. This is 50 percent more than last year. For location of the parking lots see the map in this issue of the Daily Nebraskan, Page 2.

(2) If you want to park your car in any of these stalls you have to get an official university parking permit.

Here's how you get the permit. If your Lincoln residence is more than eight blocks from the outside perimeter of the campus you're eligible. The campus, in this case, is the area bounded by Tenth street on the west and Fourteenth street on the east, Avery Avenue on the north and R street on the south. If you are physically handicapped your place of residence probably will not be a factor.

If you are eligible you do three things:

(1) Get your car registration permit and your student identification card.

(2) Bring them to the Student Union ballroom, any hour of the day, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, (Sept. 16-18), and present them to the Student Council committee. If your application is bonafide, they'll issue you an application blank.

(3) Take the approved application blank to the special booth operated by the campus police on the west end of the Library Mall (that's the area in which temporary buildings are located). They'll exchange your application blank for an official windshield sticker permit, on any of these days.

That's all you have to do. The sticker entitles you to park your car anywhere within the campus area (as defined earlier in this story) or in any of the university operated parking areas.

There are no reserved spaces this fall for either faculty or students. It's a case of first come, first served.

What happens if you don't get an official parking permit Thursday, Friday or Saturday, or you can't qualify for one?

Nothing—the first week from Sept. 20 to Sept. 26. During this period campus police will issue warning cards only. Starting Sept. 27 parking violation tickets will be issued. Students, owners, or operators of tagged cars must appear before a Student Council operated "court" which will assess fines comparable to those levied in Lincoln's municipal traffic court. The money collected will go into a scholarship fund.

Under provision of the Board of Regents parking regulations approved last summer, students who repeatedly violate the parking regulations may be suspended, or expelled, from the university.

Faculty members, and other university employees, who violate the regulations will be given regular Lincoln police traffic violation tickets and must appear in the city's municipal court to pay their fines. It's the same for Lincoln residents who park on the campus without a permit.

The new regulations were formulated this summer by a student-faculty-administration committee.

(Editor's Note: This is the first of two articles explaining the new parking setup. Better read both of them. It may save you (1) a trip to "court," and (2) some dough.)

Diploma—Four Years Away

Two Lincoln freshmen, Jackie Sorenson and Bob Seacrest, are shown touring the university campus. Forming a background is the main entrance to Memorial Stadium where mighty Cornhusker teams have added more than their share to gridiron legend during the past quarter-century. The class of '52 which these students represent is expected to speed the pulse of university life and bring new school spirit to the campus. With this object in mind, the university heartily welcomes the new blood, the first class since the end of the war in which recent high school graduates outnumber returning and entering veteran students. Early reports from the registrar estimate freshmen enrollment at well over 2,000.
