

R. W. Goss Tells of Research Grants Contributed to Faculty

Research grants totaling $54,066 to university faculty members have been announced by Dr. R. W. Goss, Dean of the Graduate College. The U. S. Public Health Service, with grants totaling $47,441, was the largest contributor, with gifts from private agencies rounding out the total.

Biggest grant goes to cancer research

The principle recipients were organizations involving in cancer research. Dr. Howard B. Hunt, head of the medical college radiology department, received $25,000 from the Public Health Service. In addition, the Nebraska Cancer Research and Education Society donated $2,500 to the Cancer Research committee of the medical college in Omaha.

Remaining Public Health Service grants were divided—$14,796 to the head of the animal pathology and hygiene department, Dr. Carl Olsen, for the study of listerellosis infection, a barnyard disease; and $7,645 to Dr. W. E. Miltzer, chemist, and Dr. Carl Georgi, bacteriologist, intended for the study of the behavior of enzymes, found in certain bacteria, some of which exist at temperatures reaching 180 degrees.

The Smith-Dorsey Co. of Lincoln donated $4,125 to Dr. Ruth Leverton, director of the human nutrition laboratory for a study of human ability to absorb iron from iron-containing compounds.
