Action, Not Talk

When is the AWS board going to do something constructive about the women's activity point system? There has been much talk, but no action on such a project.

Last spring we advocated a change and were informed by AWS members that the board would consider a revision. Are they still considering? Or will something be accomplished this year?

The women's activity point system is inadequate as it stands and will continue to be inadequate unless completely overhauled.

The principle fault of the system is that there are only three categories into which an activity can fall—A, B, or C. The first, A, includes all presidencies except honoraries and minor boards.

All other activities besides the presidencies must be rated in either of the other two classes. Now, it seems evident that there should be more than two ratings of work accomplished when some activities have three or more steps in their organizational work.

We would therefore recommend that the AWS board devise a numbered activity point system similar to the men's point board. By this method, women in activities could be rated more fairly according to responsibility held and work accomplished.

We hope that the AWS board will not just sit back and do nothing about this problem as they did last year, but will pitch in and accomplish something... action, not talk!

Campus Capers

BY VAN WESTOVER.

Vandalism reigned supreme on the campus Tuesday night when culprits (Alpha Phi and Phi Delta pledges) removed lawn chairs from various and sundry sorority and fraternity houses.

What does a pledge do when an active tries to muscle in on his love life? It's a good question and one that is puzzling Jim Connor. Just as Jim thought he was making the well known grade with Pat Boyd, might active Bill Wright met her at an hour dance, took the plunge and simply moved in.

Dense Come-back.

Charlie Dugdale: Have you seen "Strange Love" with Margaret O'Brien and Boris Karloff?

Helen Prince: No, I detest Margaret O'Brien!

Joe Litz was seen in her room last night in a state of nervous prostration. The cause—Al Marvis. Jo got wind of his cutting a class to go out with another girl, and try as she might, she couldn't find out who her competition was.

Then there is frosh Mitzi McMeekin who has fallen head over heels for Ellie Swanson's fiance, Walt Samuelson. Mitzi has started her attack on breaking up this romance so that she can have a of Walt, and refusing to give it back.

There's only one guy on campus who can claim the possession of freshman beanies for the classes of '49 through '52 inclusive. The perpetual freshman is Virgil "Oodle" Adle who has come to school three previous times and returned home in disgust after the first week of classes.

On the Calendar of Social Capers: A big free-for-all lawn party that Jane Traphagen is throwing at her Lincoln home on Saturday night. This is no small time affair and will be complete with Japanese Lanterns and Jack Reynolds. Incidentally, the whole Phi Psi house has been asked to bring dates.

Plug: From here, it looks like another big College Night at Kings on Friday. The Sigma Nus are going out en masse again this week end, and that alone should make the place more than lively.

Football Fan Witnesses Game Through Telescope

"It's a touchdown!" "No, it isn't." "Someone just spilled coke on our telescope!"

My neighbor shouted madly from our vantage point atop the balcony, last row, extreme north corner. "What was that last play? Hey, Joe, turn up the portable. There's a cloud bank over the 40 yard line."

At that crucial point a figure dashed in front of us to grasp the balcony railing. "What's the matter with him?", was my naive query. Joe said scornfully, "Just a mild case of altophobia. His oxygen mask was punctured by a passing jet plane."

Our attention now focused upon an object below and I rose to my feet to cheer. "What a spectacular run. He must have gained 60 yards. Was it Novak or Fisher?" To this Joe's only response was a low guttural sound which I interpreted to mean "That was the water boy, you dope."

But back to the game. It was second quarter with only five minutes left before the half. I sat and pondered how the mighty DiBiase who seemed so powerful in Ed. class could so resemble an ant this height.

Frosh Gridders Play Iowa State

Opening game for the Husker Frosh is Oct. 21 at Ames where they will engage the Iowa State Freshman eleven.

A game is also scheduled later in the fall with Kansas State freshmen.

Candidates on the Frosh squad are being tested on a grade system based on their showing in the weekly scrimmages. The boys are given every opportunity to advance their position from week to week.

The squad members are trying hard and setting their sights on varsity berths next year. This year's freshman squad is to be a proving ground for the varsities of the future.

In spite of the large turnout, the squad will not be handicapped by lack of individual attention.

doing? Surely it's not cold enough for a campfire today, but what else would he be doing with those two sticks? Joe, what's he threatening us for? Oh, he's yelling for us to move up a row! How can we? We'll be outside the stadium and I didn't bring my suction cup shoes.

Waving our tickets vainly in the Boy Scout master's face, we balanced ourselves upon the top stadium railing and dejectedly wondered about the cost of reserved seats on the roof of Avery Lab. Then the spirit of our Alma Mater stirred our loyalty enough to give out with a heart warming yell. This was our big moment.

The team was spurred to greater things by our stadium shaking enthusiasm. First down, ten to go! But wait—there's a fly on the binocular line, or is it only the coke man struggling up the aisle? "Down in front," accompanied by flying coke bottles, soon laid the obstruction flat in his tracks.

Cheers rang out. "Can it be they're for the departed coke man?" Joe grabs me and we hurtle down the ramp. I protested, shouting, "I want to see the end of the game!" But as I was pushed down the steps with the surging crowd, I realized the game was over. I wondered who'd won. So I fooled 'em. I didn't go home. No sir! I walked right up to the scoreboard and found out the news for myself. We'd won! And wasn't that some game too? Joe and I surely were glad we were among the more fortunate who got season tickets in the stadium.

All men interested in gymnastics should report to the basement of the Coliseum, Oct. 30, at 4 p. m., according to Phil Sprague, coach.

Ag Dean to Speak On Radio Sunday

Dr. W. V. Lambert, new dean of the University College of Agriculture, will appear as a guest on the Nebraska network broadcast, "Your University Speaks," at 12:30 p. m. Sunday.

Dr. Lambert, a native of Nebraska, recently resigned as head of the U. S. department of agriculture's research administration to join the university staff.

The broadcast will also carry Coach George "Potsy" Clark's comment on the Cornhusker-Minnesota game and a roundup of university activity.

L. F. "Pop" Klein has added four assistants besides his regular staff of "Ike" Hanscom, Harry Miller and Neal Parson.
