Students to Uncover Elephant Skeletons in U Street Cellars

Everyone's heard of the skeletons in closets, but it's not often you come across one in a cellar, especially if it belongs to a 50,000 year old mammoth.

Beneath two houses on "U" street between 14th and 16th streets are two elephant skeletons discovered when furnaces were being installed nearly 40 years ago. They couldn't be removed then without damaging the houses, but the university now owns the land and the houses are being torn down.

Students in the paleontology classes will get practical experience by uncovering the skeletons under the direction of Dr. C. B. Schultz, director of the museum; W. D. Frankforter, assistant curator of paleontology; and Henry Ryder, chief preparator of the museum.

"We don't know what we're going to get," said Dr. Schultz. "In 1909 they were fine prospects, but since then a great deal of other material has been discovered, so unless they are something unusual they will not be important."

Ryder Uncovers Tusk

Tuesday Mr. Ryder began removing debris and uncovered one tusk at the house at 1520 "U." He uncovered the plaster which the late Dr. E. H. Barbour, then director of the museum and head of the geology department, had placed over the exposed bones. It is dated 1909.

Perhaps the better of the two specimens is under the house at 1458 "U," which has not been completely torn down. Enough of this skeleton was uncovered so that it was thought to be one of the largest in the state at that time.
