Meddling With Melick

By M. J.

After the dizzy whirl of rallies, parades, dances and the game, it's high time the campus settled back and took a good long look at itself. The festivities were great. We enjoyed them too, but we're a bit weary of the party spirit. We wonder just what happens when the campus capers are cut and we represent our inadequate self to the troubled world. We wonder how long we can remain ensnared in the much of campus activities and house parties until our conscience begins to give us some trouble. In short, how much more narrow can we get?

The front page of this morning's Rag offers us a challenge. It's a chance to contribute to life while living. (If you call this living.) The model UNESCO conference, which a few thinking individuals have proposed, gives us all an opportunity to do something about the world in which we live.

We realize that the commentary up to this point seems rather vague, so here's just what we're driving at in black and white. Maybe we've got stars in our eyes when we say that peace is an individual proposition based on understanding and tolerance. Maybe we're being idealistic to say that only when all the peopes of the world know about and understand each other can we hope to bring about a semblance of order.

We concede that it's the higher ups who make the decisions and throw the switches, but it's the people of our generation who will be pushing the levers someday—do we sound like a Poli. Sci. class.

The question is: Do we as students wish to descend on the world with a football pennant in one hand and a bottle of that stuff the university frowns on in the other or do we want to make a small stab at being constructive citizens someday?

The proposed UNESCO project offers to us an opportunity to painlessly absorb some workable knowledge about our fellow man and what makes him tick. By emulating a situation which exists in today's world we get our eyes opened to the struggles which go on in a world which grows more complex each hour. Although we choose to forget it, we are a part of that world and in less than four years we will be contributing factors. We can go into the existing mess bindly or we can try to create the world we must live in.

Does all this sound a little deep and vastly remote? Very well.

It is common knowledge that in the countries of Europe that student movement has been a deciding factor in almost every political crisis. Now, with a little information, perhaps the students of America can become a vital force in the fight for peace. You are being given the chance to carry the banner.

The method is explained on page one. With 100 percent cooperation you can become a better informed citizen and a more responsible individual when you cut the string from ye old alma mater.

"Not so wild a dream!"—thanks Mr. Severeid.

Eye Doctor Will Address Nu-Meds

Dr. D. D. Sanderson, Lincoln physician will speak at a Nu-Med meeting on Wednesday, Nov. 3. His address will be on the formation and sensitivities of the eye, especially as affected by refraction and ailergy.

The meeting, which will start at 7 p. m., will be preceded by a dinner at 6:15 in room C of the Union. Students planning to attend the dinner should sign a list posted outside of Dr. Powell's office, third floor, Bessey Hall, before 5 o'clock Monday.

All pre-meds, pre-nurses, and pre-techs are invited to attend. Those who do not attend the dinner should plan to attend the meeting.

Ag College Y.W.C.A. will meet Tuesday evening in the home economics parlors. All new members will be initiated at 7:30. This is the first year the Ag College YWCA has been able to have an initiation ceremony. All members are urged to attend.

Ag YMCA will meet Tuesday evening at 7:30 in the Evangelical United Brethren church at 33rd and Starr streets. Membership drive procedure will comprise the main business and all members new and old are urged to attend.

Group pictures have been scheduled for the following Ag campus groups Tuesday afternoon at the West Stadium: Tri-K, 4; Alpha Zeta, 4:15; Varsity Dairy, 4:30. The 4-H picture originally scheduled for 4:45 has been tentatively rescheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 9.

Students at Kansas State college went to the polls last week—or at least 20% of them did. The Commonwealth party, one of two on the campus swept nine of the 16 class offices in the election.

Kansas State, Nebraska's Saturday opponent, has one of the finer passers in the conference ready to bug-a-boo the Huskers if possible. Dana Atkins gave the locals a bad time last year, and promised to do no less Saturday.

Student seating at football games is not a problem which is peculiar only to Husker students.

Colorado college officials experienced difficulty at a recent game with students who occupied seats reserved for the public. Trouble stemmed from an overcrowded student section.
