

In Nebraska . . . Swindler Sees Greener Pastures in Journalism

Community newspapers of Nebraska can provide the "greener pastures" of journalism, Dr. W. F. Swindler, director of the School of Journalism advised Nebraska High School journalists Friday night.

Speaking at the convention banquet of the NHSPA, Swindler said that between 75 and 90 percent of the journalism graduates in the past three years have gone to work in Nebraska. "We had more offers than we could fill in the next five years," he said, "retiring Nebraska newspapermen who want Nebraska journalism graduates," he added.

Hits Big City Reporting.

Directing his speech to those who were attracted by metropolitan dailies, he threw cold water on the glamor of big-city reporting. "Community newspaper work offers excellent financial opportunities and a chance for the newspaperman to perform a real service to his community," he declared.

In a later speech, Dale Fahinbruch, university law student and former political reporter for the Lincoln Journal outlined the task of the successful political reporter. "First," he said, "you must give the man on the street, the voter, an accurate, full account of the men who would like to run his government."

Honest Accounts.

An honest account of political news, he continued, is the product of the reporter's ability to know thoroughly people from whom he obtains his news and to know himself well enough to prevent his personal prejudices from coloring his reports.

"Dogged determination and untiring effort to get at the truth are two important attributes of a good reporter," he said.

Jeretta Leu, York High School, acted as toastmistress for the banquet. Two one-act plays presented by students of the experimental theater provided entertainment.

Do you have trouble eating crispy breakfast cereals every morning? Does your crispy crackly breakfast cereal drive your husband insane? Then switch to noiseless Sally's Soggy Cereal. Guaranteed not to deafen you with the din of snapping, cracking and popping.

Darrel Peter's speech 76 class is struggling through such commercials for class assignments. It's radio and in radio everything goes, even commercials.

Carmen!

Tonight at 9 another Authors of the Ages production will go on the air with the familiar story of the gypsy temptress. Playing the gypsy is Jo Lewis and the dashing Don Jose will be played by Don Johannes, university theatre veteran. Other members of the cast include: Ced Hartman as El Dancaire and Martinez; Bob Lundberg as the jailor; Frank Jacobs as Morales; Milt Hoffman as Zuniga and Garcia, and Mary Wenstrand as the woman. After seeing the movie "The Loves of Carmen" it will be interesting to see how the radio department's play treats the story.

Have you heard the story about the old vent in the basement? No, it isn't a mystery story. It is merely a tribute to the ingenuity of the sound effects crew. They have converted an old vent running from the basement to the attic of the Temple building into an echo chamber.

Another ingenious sound effect is the noise of footsteps crunching in the snow. This is done by gently squeezing a box of corn starch.

Here is the sound effect of the week by CBS: the sound of an army of ants marching through the jungle. This was done by lightly rubbing piles of straw together!

This week's Playwright's matinee will be the story of a familiar sight back in the days when America was very young . . . The Yankee Peddler. Playwright's is on Thursday at 4:30 over KFOR.

Sports announcing seems to be an up and coming field in the radio department. Paul Schupach is teaching a class of over 30 students how to broadcast football games, play by play. Students actually got practical experience broadcasting the UCLA game and having it recorded on a wire recorder. The recorder is played back and students receive tips on how to do a better job at the games.

Phalanx will meet Tuesday at 7:30 in the Armory for formal pledging. All actives and pledges are required to attend.
