A Happy Note . . .

Twenty-six organizations have volunteered their services to the Red Cross College Unit Christmas project. In this there is a happy note.

It is gratifying to realize that the spirit of Christmas has prompted university students to be as concerned with spreading good will and doing good as with indulging in the commercial, less charitable aspects of the holiday season.

These groups are to be commended for taking the time, effort and expense to bring Christmas cheer to those whose circumstances prevent them from enjoying the usual, well-loved kind of Christmas characterized by family, home, the tree and gifts.

Perhaps the influence of this sort of activity will carry over into the post-holiday programs for these participating groups. This is our hope. For activity which teaches the college student charity and humility and enables him to see beyond the scope of his own individual life, wrapped up as it is in studies, petty issues and social events, is far superior, we feel, than activities which only serve to promote the individual or the group in campus competition.

All campus activities have merit, to be sure, but once the trend is toward activities which develop the intellect (such as the forthcoming UNESCO conference) and enable students to see many of the realities of life outside the college world, then will the student be living a life which will best prepare him for his duties as a citizen and his obligations as a moral human being.

As I Was Saying . . .

BY PAT NORDIN

Birthdays come and go but Jo Litz will remember hers of tomorrow for a long time. She'll get a big moral uplift, at least, when she opens her gift from Don Dutton, who, being a model boy scout, does a good deed every day where it is needed the most.

Whether it be a last stab at leap year success or a New Years resolution, Lydia Nekuda has a feather planted in her cap for Charlie Dugdale, who is bidding his time by suggesting that Lydia merely go home and take a cold shower. "Come with me to the Casbar" are the words of Tubby Koble who is eagerly awaiting her trip to Wisconsin come vacation to see "Cas."

Couple of the week in the news is Suzie Reed and Jerry Johnston. Jerry admits he is quite enamored and the condition must be mutual when a twosome gets so absent minded they sit over coffee until 10.29 on a week-night.

"Behind the hill there is a still" . . . only it's at the ZBT basement Saturday night and it will contain (cider) moon shine for the "Mountain" party. It's pretty sure that Don Rice and the boys will play, and should be fine since their big jam session with members of Gene Krupa's band until 3 a. m. Sunday night.

In conjunction with the policies of National Motar Board, the Motar Board chapter on this campus has sent the following statement to the various activity and organized groups to make known their position in regard to unethical political practices.

Because we were mentioned in a recent anonymous publication and because we are responsible for women's elections in the spring, we the Motar Boards want to make known our position on women's factions. By a faction, we mean an organized attempt to bribe or intimidate voters on order to determine who shall be elected. A faction includes "block-voting." "Block-voting" we define as (1) either the official or unofficial guarantee of votes to one party or for a certain candidate; (2) or the insistence by an organization that the members support one party or one particular candidate.

On the basis of these definitions, we have voted unanimously to oppose all factions, particularly those pertaining to women's politics. We ask for the support of all women on the campus to help us keep honesty and fair play an integral part of women's organizations.

Very sincerely,

Who Will Be the Next Coach?—Nobody Knows

What will Husker football fans get for Christmas? Will it be a new football coach whose name alone will spell victory on the gridiron for "Dear old Nebraska U."

About this time every year (at least for the last five years) the Monday morning quarterbacks begin hollering loud and strong for new blood on the blood of the Nebraska coaching staff. With their cry thousands of other ardent Nebraska football fans start the call for a new coach and then procede to start millions of rumors with a famous coach's name on the end of each rumor.

Slow Start
This year the cry has had a slow start. Patsy Clark, liked by everyone, seems to be the likely choice for full time athletic director, but fans all over the state are clamoring for a "big name" coach to bring Husker football stock up to pre-war quality.

With this the season that finds many a name coach floating around loose because of a tough season it is only natural that Nebraskans may begin to wonder whether or not they will get a new coach and who it may be.

Paul Brown, former Cleveland Ram and Ohio State coach is near the top of the list of probable coaches for next season. Harry Stuhldreher, now athletic director at Wisconsin, was a heavy favorite after students at that school showed their mid-season temper over a series of jolting losses.

Only this week Bert LaBrucherie resigned as head coach of UCLA and thus automatically added his name to the list of probabilities.

What's the answer to the question who will be our next football coach? So far nobody knows, but with the clamor and noise that sports editors and fans all over the state have been making the answer should be available in the not too distant future.
