their worth. But beneath this warm exterior warmer dresses and suits have also become outstanding.

Jo Shively shuns the cold in a deep brown corduroy jumper. Pockets buttoned in gold and a thin gold belt are the unusual features, and the underneath note is a tailored white blouse.

Quilting, a favorite in grandmother's day, has become the pride and joy of Virginia Bodison. She wears a rust, green and white cotton print, quilted for warmth. The flared skirt and long-sleeved bodice are set off by white buttons and finished with a Peter Pan collar.

Carol Gross looks like the typical collegiate in a plaid suit featuring a long box jacket and multi-pleated skirt. Unusual are the silver rimmed self buttons. The colors are red, dark green, yellow, and white.

Jo Brodenburg stays warm in a black velveteen suit with a fishtail back and a full skirt. The jacket features a single row of tiny buttons and a small roll collar.

Beneath any of an assortment of bright sweaters, Bev Larson wears a brown woolen skirt with tab pockets and a cleverly belted back. Pat Baldwin finds that there is nothing like a brilliant ski-sweater for warmth and style.

Donna Jean Nordgren favors her English tweed suit. The belted jacket, straight skirt, and full cuffed sleeves are emphasized by the harmonizing brown leather belt.

Soldier blue corduroy is the material of Ioleen Miller's pet suit. High slit pockets and gold and blue buttons are the only ornaments on the otherwise plain suit.

Jean Borcharding has possession of the "ultimate" in gabardine dresses. Hers is royal blue, perennial favorite, with three-quarter length sleeves and a plain bodice front. The back is buttoned to the waist and has two flirty pleats at the hem. The dress is an ideal one for gold accessories.
