

Tex Beneke Slated for Prom

Tex Beneke and his band will play for the annual Jr.-Sr. Prom, March 4, in the coliseum, according to Norbert Tiemann, chairman of the Prom for the Innocents Society.

Co-sponsored by the Innocents and the Student Union, the Prom will be informal to offer students a "breather" to the formal season and to accent the "preview of Spring" theme. By Hooper is the Student Union Prom chairman.

Although special emphasis is given to the attendance of juniors and seniors, the Prom is open to all students in the University. Tickets which are soon to go on sale are priced at $3.00 a couple. Spectator tickets will sell for 85c.

Plans are underway for the presentation of a junior woman and senior man to reign as King and Queen of the Prom. Filing and election procedure will be announced later this week, according to Jack Selzer, Innocent in charge of the presentation.

The last informal Prom was held in 1943, at which event the Innocents Society tapped its new members. The early tapping was due to the uncertain status in regard to military service of that year's junior men, according to the 1942-43 president Preston Hayes.

Prom goes in the '47 season danced to the music of Raymond Scott and viewed the presentation of Joan Fankhauser as Prom Girl. Barbara Rowland, Arts and Science senior, took honors last year as the '48 Prom Girl. Music for the event was provided by Lee Williams.

Student Journalists Praised For Outstate Filler Project

As a result of the evident need by state newspapers for general-interest filler material, students in the Nebraska School of Journalism have been part of a successful project that is paying off to Nebraska publishers.

Swindler.

Dr. William F. Swindler, director of the School of Journalism, and William H. Hice, assistant professor, felt that certain features written as class assignments were the type that the publishers needed and could use. So the idea was started. With the help of the Nebraska Press association, the filler, written by the students, was mimeographed and sent to state publishers.

In addition to the filler material, the class prepared and sent two features each week. One was called "Sports Trail," and the other "Cornhusker Comment."

Such subjects as Nebraska sons in the major leagues and nicknames of national sports figures were used. Members of the class were required to write a weekly column on a topic of general interest for the "Cornhusker Comment."

The project immediately "caught on" by state publishers. William M. Cox of the Pierce County Leader wrote, "Without exception we found the features sent to us by the special newspaper features class timely and well written, far above the average so-called free news releases."

Students "Paid Off" Too. And from the students' standpoint the service also paid off. Knowing that their stories would be published gave the students an added incentive to write. Practical experience was gained through this writing; experience that would some day help them in jobs.

New ideas are now being considered by the School of Journalism that will enlarge the project to include photographs, book reviews and brief monthly or bi-monthly digests of articles in nationally known magazines.

Honor System Successful at Law College

The honor system, designed to eliminate the necessity for proctored examinations, was used successfully in the College of Law this year.

Under a plan set up by Law School association members, students agreed that: (a) No student during the course of an examination shall give or receive assistance from any other student. (b) No student during the course of an examination may use any materials not specifically authorized by the instructor giving the examination. (c) Each student upon completion of his examination shall sign the following pledge: "I hereby affirm that I have lived up to the Honor System in writing this examination and that I have neither received, or attempted to, nor given aid on this examination and I (know) (do not know) of any one who did. (Underline whichever applicable.)"

The system provides for an Honor council which will investigate any alleged infractions. Members of the council will be representatives from the Law School association, the president and two elected members from each class. Maximum penalty will be expulsion from the School of Law, and a lesser penalty may be fixed if circumstances seem to make it advisable.
