

Communism Transcends Mere Political Party Ties

... Says A. T. Anderson

"Communism is not simply a political party, it is a theory of history, a way of life and a faith," Albin T. Anderson, University history professor, said Wednesday night.

Anderson addressed the first in a series of five public lecture audiences on the general subject of Communism and what it means to America.

Tracing the historical development of Communism, Anderson said that it is the product of the thinking and writing of two men, Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. These founded what they call "scientific socialism." In modern times, Lenin, the Russian revolutionist, became not only Marxism's most active propagandist, but also the first Marxist to achieve political power in a state.

ACCORDING TO Anderson, there are three basic ideas which communists believe, and which all Americans should understand if we are to oppose it successfully.

"Communism can be characterized as a theory of history. Communists believe that each major epoch of human history is never static. Each epoch carries within its womb a struggle between that which is and that which is to be.

Basically, the struggle is that of classes.

"THESE CLASSES in turn are arrayed against each other in terror of their relationship to the means of production. In a capitalistic society, it is that of the means of production against those without property. The latter must eventually triumph. They will outweigh, outvote or simply overthrow the smaller classes.

"Communism is also materialistic. All life, all thought, all culture is rooted in the material. All religion, says the Marxist, is a great hoax.

"MARXISTS WOULD also insist that the state is simply an organ of class domination. By possessions of the law, police and military, it served the few in their possession of private property. That is why the state would probably be thrown over by force. No such instrument of force would be needed in a classless society."

Anderson's speech is the first in a series of five articles on Communism and what it means to America. These lectures seek to define what we mean by communism and why communism is alien to American way of life

Filings to Open Next Week; Present Election Rules Stand

Council elections will be held April 12. Filing will open next week. This was the decision of the Student Council in a two-hour meeting Wednesday.

The motion made by Jack Selzer, was presented after prolonged debate on constitutional provisions regulating election rules. The by-laws of the Council constitution state that an election must be held before April 20.

The Council discussed and finally overruled the possibility of changing the rules to delay the election until May.

Bev Sievers asked if the spring elections were conducted along party lines and the faculty was to vote down the two party constitutions would the election be invalid.

President Ball replied that such an event would probably entail only a loss of seating by the parties and representatives involved.

TWO PROPOSALS

to change election publicity rules were voted down. The first proposal would have given each party $25. Since both measures were vetoed the election will be conducted according to the rules printed in the Sunday's Daily Nebraskan.

Schleusener

THE CONSTITUTIONAL assembly, proposed in Wednesday's Daily Nebraskan, was explained to the Council by editor Norm Leger.

Leger stated that the proposed assembly would offer an opportunity for "true representation of all students interested in student government." The proposal, he said, would remove the burden of decision from the shoulders of the Council. However the Council would supervise the assembly, he continued.

The plan was tabled for next Wednesday's meeting.

DICK SCHLEUSENER, judiciary committee chairman, reported on the meeting between the sub-committee of the faculty senate committee on student organizations and social functions and the Council judiciary committee. He said that the faculty committee was not empowered to make any concrete decisions but that two courses seemed to be clear. The courses were to pursue the present political party program or to turn the decision on representation over to some body other than the Council, Schleusener said.

Schleusener also reported the judiciary committee ruling on the action of the constitutions committee in dealing with the constitution of the University party. The constitutions committee had been charged with failing to consult all committee members before presenting the University party constitution to the Council.

THE JUDICIARY committees recommended a four point program to be used in future constitutional consideration. The points were (1) that the chairman of the constitution committee notify all members, (2) that the committee draw up an outline by which constitutions shall be considered, (3) that the number of votes for and against the constitution be presented when the committee reports to the Council (4) that a faculty advisor be present when the constitutions committee is making its consideration. The proposal was adopted.

Ag Extension Will Receive Part of Budget

Inflation is one of the factors on which the University has based its request for a 20 per cent increase in its operating budget.

One hundred and ninety thousand dollars of the proposed increase will go to the University Agricultural Extension service. Since federal funds have not provided for the increased cost of living, salary raises must come from state funds.

Nebraska's Extension supervisors have an average salary of $4,300 compared with an average of $4,628 at ten other universities, Colorado State, Kansas State, Idaho, Montana State, North Dakota State, Oregon State, South Dakota State, Utah State, Washington State and Wyoming.
