

Campus Activities Change Little In Decade of University History

BY NORMA CHUBBUCK

Do campus activities and news items change much in ten years? A look at the Daily Nebraskan files for 1939 and 1949 will show that changes are quite minor.

A few changes are major however. Campus politics taking the spotlight this spring are somewhat different than the 1939 version. There were three legal factions on campus then, and the rallies they held were little short of stupendous. Sometimes they got out of hand, and a consequence was the outlawing of faction rallies on the campus. The rally before an election in November resulted in the serious injury of a student, which eventually proved fatal.

THE ACCIDENT occurred when the Phi Delt's were standing in front of their house hoping to prevent a barrage of eggs, such as had marred the house the year before. A Phi Delt was the most seriously injured of the students, though a number of minor injuries occurred when the ralliers ran out of eggs and started using stones as a substitute.

The fall semester of 1939 started off with a bang, when the editor of the Rag was suspended by the Pub board for printing news which had not been released by the Editorial and Publicity offices. The controversy raged for four days; then the editor was reinstated. Later an editorial in the World Herald defended the right of the editor to dig up and print any news concerning University activities, regardless of the publicity releases.

THE OVERPOINTED and ineligibility bugaboo raised its head just before the November elections, when the president of the Student Council was forced to resign because of an incomplete received the semester before.

Then as now the Student Council was under fire from many directions. As a result of the rally which got out of hand, a bill had been recommended by the Council judiciary committee which would punish factions or faction members if it could be proved that they assaulted another faction member. Instead, plans were made to hold a model rally, which would show how rallies should be held.

Sponsoring 'things' is nothing new to the Rag. A 'gripe session' was the method used to try to foster more interest in the university and to gain a cross-section of general undergraduate opinion. According to Editor Harold Neimann, the session went over big, with both students and sponsors agreeing on its success.

News about school was important, too. A December headline announced that a report showed the University of Nebraska to be the 18th largest school in the nation, with an enrollment of 6,771. This came after a spring semester when the possibility of limiting enrollment to 5,000 was being considered by the Regents. The question arose from a contemplated reduction in the budget of the school by the state legislature.

MORE MINOR but none the less interesting, incidents kept the feature pages of the 1939 Rag 'alive.' One headline proclaimed that students on the Nebraska campus had consumed 9,000 miles of sample gum!

Ten years make little real difference. . . then as now the problem of intercampus bus service was being considered by the Student Council; then as now the faction was the cause of much discussion; and then as now the Phi Phis woke up one morning to find that they had been the victims of thieves, with $380.60 in money and clothing missing.

Med College Open House

Open house at the College of Medicine in Omaha will be held on April 23 for junior and senior pre-medical students and all students interested in nurses' laboratory technicians' training.

Opportunity to see the facilities of the college and the university hospital will be afforded, and demonstrations will be given. Arrangements have been made to serve luncheon at a nominal cost to the visiting students.

Attendance is on a voluntary basis and each student must provide his own transportation.

Students who expect to attend should add their names to the list on the pre-medical bulletin board, 306 Bessey hall, not later than April 14.

MARY JANE gives the telephone in her house a real work-out.

But we're not worried a bit. We know Mary Jane's telephone is going to keep right on delivering good service year after year. Because the Bell System puts a lot of time, thought, and testing into making telephone equipment as rugged and trouble-free as possible.

Tests are constantly under way at the Bell Telephone Laboratories. There, for example, new types of telephone instruments are put through a school of hard knocks. Dials and other parts are given strength and wear tests. Even the bottom of the telephone set has been designed and checked to make sure that it will not scratch or stain furniture.

Such tests—on little things as well as on big things—help give you the world's best telephone service at the lowest possible cost.
