Listed in Directory Correctly? Students Urged to Check Info

The last call has been issued by Directory Editor Audrey Flood for corrections on student and faculty listings.

If any changes have occurred in the person's address, phone number, college or hometown since registration last spring or this fall, he has been urged by Miss Flood to send in a correction blank.

The blank, which follows below, is to be sent to Room 308, Union, in care of Miss Flood, immediately.

This will absolutely be the last chance for students and University employees to check on a correct listing in the annual Student-Faculty Directory. If a person is at all uncertain about his listing, he is urged to complete the blank and send it in.

Engineers Plan Tours for Oct. 24

In view of the fact that several engineering societies expressed desires to make inspection tours of the various engineering projects in this part of the state, the Engineering Executive Board has announced Monday, Oct. 24, as the date all tours must be made.

It should be understood that this trip is not for seniors only, as was done previously, nor is it compulsory for any one society to make a tour.

With Tongue In Cheek

By Cub Clem

The thundering guns of this summer's Daily Nebraskan are quiet. Sarcastic murmurs from the student body are stilled.

The tower is built. The Mueller Carillon tower, as yet without its bells, gattered its young strength late last week, shrugged off its scaffolding and at last stood alone. And it was a sight behold.

Even without landscaping, the white shaft that rises between Bessey and Morrill halls is beautiful. And inspiring. It is the eye-catching landmark this campus has so long needed.

And so The Daily Nebraskan, a little shamefacedly perhaps, thanks the benefactor-alumnus who made the gift. We are sure the students do the same.

NSA Again . . .

Richard J. Medalie, National Student Association vice-president for educational problems, is scheduled to speak to interested students at 4 p. m. today in Room 105 of Social Sciences.

That is the gist of a front page story in today's Daily Nebraskan.

The story doesn't mention the row that hit this campus two years ago when NSA petitioned for entry to NU, a petition turned down by a narrow margin in the Student Council after many heated debates, meetings and discussions. The publicity release received by The Daily Nebraskan said little of NSA's aims, or of the advantages of NSA membership.

Two years ago, the student body didn't think much of these advantages. Nor did we. However, we hear that NSA can now offer a few more things. We also hear that NSA has lost its pinkish, internationally-controlled tinge. That's what we hear.

If these reports are true, then NSA definitely bears consideration. An organization such as the NSA could do students a lot of good.

So The Daily Nebraskan would like to see many students at the speech today. The student might learn that NSA can help a lot. Or they might not. Either way, NSA bears scrutiny by all students interested in a better University.

Hope to Correct 'Evil'
"We are all working to correct an evil," said Dr. Colbert, "in the expenditure of federal funds for education that wasn't the original intent of Congress, without jeopardizing rightful benefits of veterans now in school doing a good job."

Under the directive, the University official in charge of veterans affairs will examine veteran students and give the University approval or disapproval they now give. But, instead of the University being the final step in authorization, the VA will now double-check such requests. Their decision may come after the beginning of work in a course and may result in loss of fees and subsistence to the veteran and a loss of University payments, explained Colbert.

Uncertainty
It leaves the veteran uncertain about his educational opportunities, said Colbert, as well as leaving the University uncertain about its action on veteran cases.

Dr. Colbert and other veteran affairs directors of colleges in the country will meet in Chicago next month to discuss the directive with VA officials. They will seek to modify the ruling to make it easier to administrate.

Action towards outlawing the directive is taking definite shape, according to veteran sources. Many persons concerned with the ruling are of the opinion that it is a very bad instruction, commented Colbert.

Two Bills in Congress
Meanwhile, two bills have been submitted in Congress which would repeal the directive and hamstring any future attempts to issue broad restricting regulations by the VA. Both bills are in committee, one in the House and one in the Senate. The first was introduced by Rep. Orrin Teague of Texas and the second by Senator Robert Taft of Ohio. Both bills are almost identical in nature.

It is doubted in most circles that either bill will be passed by the Congress during this session. Opposition is expected from such men as Rep. John Rankin, chairman of the veterans affairs committee of the house, who is described as "a long time bitter foe of G. I. Bill benefits."

Tickets on Sale For Lincoln Symphony

Student tickets for the Lincoln Symphony Concert series for the '49-'50 season, at half the price of the regular reserved tickets, are now available in the Union office, and from members of the music honoraries.

Priced at $5, plus tax, the tickets may be purchased from members of Sigma Alpha Iota, Delta Omicron, Mu Phi Epsilon and Sinfonia. Regular reserved tickets are on sale in the Lincoln Symphony Concert association office, 325 Stuart building, for $8, $9 and $10 plus tax.

Artists and concerts for the season include: Lincoln Symphony orchestra with Leo Kopp, conductor, and Emanuel Wishnow, violin soloist, Dec. 13; Lincoln Symphony orchestra, Jan. 9; Eugene List, pianist, Feb. 28; Bronsley and Babin, premier duo pianists, March 14; Isaac Stern, violinist, April 3, and Lincoln Symphony orchestra and audition winners, May 2.

Because of inclement weather, the deadline for completing the second round of the intramural tennis and doubles tournament has been postponed to Tuesday evening, Oct. 11. Quarter round matches should be played before Oct. 14.
