

'Tippler' Types Found Among (sh!) Huskers

By Alger Bibble & Joe Zilch.

"Call is at three today."

To a great majority of the students on the campus, this would mean nothing whatsoever, but to a certain element, this is an incitation.

"Shuffleboard? I'll go."

Same thing. Another invitation. Undergraduate drinking is a problem of almost every campus over the country today. In spite of the opinion of the Office of Student Affairs, it does go on. And it will go on. There just isn't much that we can do about it. But, for the benefit of the green little freshmen on the campus, we will identify some of the more obvious types seen in some of the local bistors.

Number one is the "Gee fellas, I'd like to but I don't know if I should because my folks don't know I drink" or freshman type. He is ultimately convinced that it will do him more good to sop up a couple than it will for him to go to that horrible orientation class.

Number two is the "Sure I'll go if I can borrow some identification" type. He manages to get a draft card from some old senior who is 21, but doesn't go in for minor sports. Usually most sophomores fit into this group.

Number three is the junior class, of the "I don't give a damn, I'm going to quie school anyhow," type. He even cuts classes in order to be with the fellows. Usually manages to get his assignments done and tests taken but his average isn't too high.

Number four is the senior or "This is my last year before I go out in the cold cruel world" type. He is out for a last good fling before he goes to work. Realizing that this is his last chance for a good fling, he makes up for his lost three years by losing another.

And so we have them, kiddies. Look them over well. And remember that some of your best friends probably fit into one of these categories.

(Ed. Note): We're only kiddin' honest. This doesn't really go on at NU.
