separate ballot for each class. At the close of election the ballots shall be counted by the election officials. The Australian type ballot will be used.
"No vote shall be solicited at the polls nor in the building in which the election is being held during election day. No printed, mimeographed, typed or otherwise mechanically printed material nor any handbills in behalf of any candidate or party shall be permitted. Any candidate violating these rules either in person or through his supporters shall thereby become ineligible upon the presentation of conclusive evidence. In no case shall any candidate be allowed to have more than four handmade posters displayed. . . . Only regular students are allowed to vote."

The class officer election will be the first since the faculty committee on Student Affairs issued a ban on all elections last spring. The last regular all-University election was for the junior and senior class presidents on Nov. 16 of 1948.
Last year's officers were Bill Mueller, junior class, and Fritz Hegwood, senior class. They were chosen from four and three candidates, respectively.
The principal duty of the class presidents is traditionally the planting of the two ivy shoots at the annual Ivy Day ceremonies. Constitutionally, they are to represent the senior and junior classes in activities and class spirit. They are often called upon to participate in such affairs as the Junior-Senior prom.

Corn Increase Possible Says Agronomist

Great increases in per acre yields of corn in the corn growing regions of America are still possible according to Dr. T. A. Kisselbach, agronomist at the University experiment station. He spoke before an industry-research conference of the American Seed Trade Association in Chicago yesterday.

"That corn yields can be increased materially and profitably on most farms there is no doubt," said Dr. Kisselbach, one of the country's pioneer corn breeders. "Public and private research and experience of farmers point the way. Better production may not represent less effort or less work per acre with respect to all practices but will reflect more efficiency and lower expenditures. "Efficient production rather than overproduction of any specific crop should be the watchword," he said.

Dr. Kisselbach then outlined cultural practices which would result in not only greater yields, but also in greater conservation. He estimated, in the absence of irrigation and under prevailing weather conditions, that corn producing areas can profitably increase the corn yield of this country by 70 percent."

Book Review...

Why doesn't the University bookstore, as a non-profit concern, reduce prices on books? Why doesn't Regents sell supplies other than books? These are questions that need answering.

The avowed policy of Regents, the only University-operated bookstore, is in the interest of the student. It is not operated to make a big profit which can be diverted to purposes which do not concern the student. If present plans are carried out, Regents will eventually become self-supporting. Its operational costs are now paid for by the University.

If Regents becomes able to pay its own expenses, it will be willing to reduce its prices on new and used books. So we have a price war. So what? If the student is the prime concern of the University, the University should not be afraid of a price war.

In a report to a non-existent Student Council last spring, the director of the bookstore declared, "It is a matter of record that no funds have been withdrawn from the bookstore account to be used for other purposes, and the students have the assurance of the present administration that no funds will be withdrawn except as payments of utilities, rent and actual expense . . ."

On the surface, then, Regents is operating for the student. But what kind of a deal does the student get at Regents? Can he purchase supplies other than books? No. If he buys his books at the University bookstore, he will have to go to one of the other stores for notebooks, etc. He probably will go to one of the other stores in the first place.

Bookstore owners agree that supplies are one of their most important sources of revenue. If Regents is going to handle its own operational costs, it will certainly need the supply business. It is obvious, of course, that Regents doesn't have the space. What we need is a new store.

Furthermore, according to Regents, if it could carry supplies, it could sell them for any price. This means they could be marked down below list price. Regents has the understanding that it must not sell books below list price.

An act of the Nebraska state legislature says the University must provide books for all courses at a fair and reasonable price. The administration has interpreted "fair and reasonable" to mean "not below list price." Who interpreted "fair and reasonable" to the administration?

Because of this interpretation, the student purchases the same new book at any store at the same price. All three stores buy books back from students at approximately 50 per cent of list price. The University bookstore recently was able to reduce its mark-up on used books by five per cent. According to Regents, its price on used books is therefore lower than that of the other stores. If the price on used books can be lowered, why can't Regents mark down its new books?

We are not implying that all the bookstores reduce their prices, even if they have to go in the red. But if Regents eventually becomes able to pay for itself and still makes a profit, it should use this net profit to the student's advantage.

Radio Program To Air Dorsey

Monday's "Gloombuster Preview" will feature the music of Jimmy Dorsey and his band.

The program can be heard over radio station KOLN from 2:45 to 3 p. m., just before the regular "Gloombuster" show.

Jimmy Dorsey's band will be featured at the annual Mortar Board ball this week end. When Dorsey exhibited his style by way of records in 1939 and 1940, his platters featured singers Bob Eberly and Helen O'Connell. During those two years, some six million Jimmy Dorsey records were purchased. "Amapola," "Green Eyes" and "Tangerine" were among those records sold.

With the Dorsey band today are vocalists Larry Noble and Dottie O'Brien.
