Milo Bail Addresses Graduates

Declaring that students are going into the second half of life's game, Dr. Milo Bail, president of the University of Omaha, told University graduates that they must face democracy's responsibilities as well as assume its rights.

Dr. Bail addressed 660 students of the 20th January commencement, pointing out that of these responsibilties, four are basic:

1. A fundamental faith in, and loyalty to, the principles of democratic living.

2. Work—work for the joy of it—that you may stand on your own feet, pay your own freight and ask no special favors.

3. Establishment of a happy, harmonious home, the basic institution of democracy.

4. Becoming a good neighbor and participating in the social, civic and political life of your community, state and nation for the betterment of society as a whole.

Challenge of Work

"One of the great challenges facing us today is work," began Dr. Bail. "There is no easy path of success. The earth yields nothing save to the labor of man. No matter what some individuals, even some in high places, are saying to the contrary today, we just don't get something for nothing."

"We have become too complacent about our human problems." Dr. Bail stated.

He added that if we could use thousands of our greatest scientists and spend two billion dollars to produce the first atomic bomb, then we should also be able to find the answers to our problems of human relationships.

He scoffed at the decadent expression of "no frontiers."

Architecture Student Wins Design Contest

Arnold Butt, Lincoln, a senior architectual student at the University of Nebraska, won first place honors in the national Peaux Arts competition for design of a suburban department store.

The award, sponsored by The Architectual Forum, a professional journal, is a national recognition coveted by advanced students. It includes a token prize of $50.

Butt produced his design as a class problem under the direction of Prof. Haralamb Georgescu who was one of the leading architectural resigners of central Europe before coming to the U. S. about two years ago. Production of Butt's design required about 100 hours of work.

Douglas Haskell, a representative of The Forum, advised Butt that competition in his particular class was especially keen and that he is to be congratulated "on winning against real competition." Butt is the first Nebraska student to win first place in a Forum contest.

Last year Butt submitted the prize-winning design for a housing project sponsored by the Lincoln Housing Authority.

Another Nebraska student, Dale Gibbs, also of Lincoln, won an honorable mention in the Forum's contest.
