Evans Explains Style
Replying to a question concerning his own appraisal of Williams' style, Evans said, "Due to his poetic artistry, he developed a style into his plays that is very different. Perhaps that is why "A Streetcar Named Desire," and "Glass Menagerie" won Pulitzer prizes. This is amazing since he is still young for a noted writer—only 36 years old."

"He has been quite fortunate "He has been quite fortunate in having the best of actors and directors to help make his plays successful," said Evans. "An example was the late Laurette Taylor, famous actress. Although she was in retirement, she accepted the part of Amanda, the mother, in "Glass Menagerie" without hesitation. It was as if she had lived to make a success in that part; it was so spectacuin that part, it was so spectacular." he continued. "She is known as one of the finest of American actresses, too."
