NU Yearbook Publication Was 'No Joke' in Old Days

Announcement that the Corn- hand and wear large cuffs, but husker will be out next week is not startling news to University students, who take the appearance of the yearbook each spring as a matter of course.

In the old days, however, no effort was made to publish the volume annually, and early editions appeared once every two or three years. The first of these, called The Sombrero, was published in 1884. Its title page features an engraving of six young men wearing uniforms of a sort, large hats and knee boots, and equipped with rifles and hatchets. In the preface the editors complained that their efforts had been complicated by a variety of mistakes if they are not redifficulties, including a shortage pested " of time, lack of people to assume financial responsibility and an ' entraver who "went back" on his word.

"We put in the class list," they a"dad, "all those that will gradua : with the class, all those the mean to if not prematurely fire those that would like to and fi ally all those that think they ought to."

The book included a history of the University, of the alumni and of the various classes. Writers were especially caustic in their treatment of the juniors. They admitted that their own classwork was "something truly horrible" and added by way of exmation

The above form is a replica of the data card which is currently being distributed to independent students. Don Flesher, president of ISA, is anxious that all independents fill in a copy of the form.

All students who do not have the above card may clip this one out, fill in the appropriate blanks and send it to Flesher at the ISA office, Room 309, Union.

The data card is a part of organization plan initiated by Flesher. According to the president, emphasis next semester will be placed on social and intramural sports events.

If any independent student wishes to play on an intramural, all that is needed is to fill out the above card. Then next year he will be notified as to the team he is on and when and where he is to play.

Etudents Will hand" Judge Crops On Saturday

Students who can judge crops will have a chance to display their talent Saturday at the annual crops judging contest sponsored by Tri-K, agronomy honorary.

Any University student is eligible to compete in the contest which begins at 8 a. m., Saturday with registeration in the Activities building. The contest judging will also be held in the Activities building.

Sixty samples of identification and eight classes of judging will be in the contest which will last about two and a half hours. Divisions

Students competing will be diwided into freshman, junior and senior divisions. They will be classified according to the folwing qualifications:

Frechman group-students who have had Agronomy I or no Aeronomy.

Junior group-students who have had Agronomy 1 and 3. Senior group-students who have had Agronomy 1, 3 and 5. Classification is based on the aber of classes in agronomy a student has taken, not school standing. All three classes will judge the same material, but will be judged with different competition.

Ten ribbons will be awarded in each of the freshman and junfor groups. Senior division winas will be awarded five rib-m. Three medals will also be ted to winning contes-
