Five Campus Buildings Boast Air Cooling

Want to cool off? The places to go on the campus are the Library, Union, or Burnett! These buildings along with the Administration building and the Student Health Center are among those which have been air-conditioned. The Social Science hall air-conditioning unit is to be completed this week.

These six buildings are the only ones that can be air-conditioned with the present cooling system which consists of two vacuum condensers in the University Power plant. The 200 and 400 ton jet condensers use the steam that has already been used to produce the electricity. The water is circulated to the buildings and back again by a 125 horse power water pump liberating 75,000 cu. ft. per minute of water through 14 inch pipes to Burnett hall where the pipes are reduced to 8 and 6 inches for further distribution. The pipes are insulated with cork; hence there is little temperature rise between the plant and the coils.

Heat Wave.

During the last heat wave the water passed through the coils at 40 degrees and came back to the plant at 48 degrees. The coils were extracting 4,000 BTU per hour of heat from these buildings except the Social Science hall.

Teachers College, Bessey hall, Andrews hall, and Morrill hall are not designed for air-conditioning but the building and grounds committee is working on plans for the systems.

A new system has been developed which is being investigated: Small pipes would be placed in each room and the cooling equipment would be placed in a small closet in the room.

The new buildings that are to be built on the campus are designed for air-conditioned ventilation. But the dream will not be realized until the university can get enough money to finance more condensers.

Writers Hold Regional Meet

A mid-American regional writers conference is being held on the Kansas State College campus June 19 through 30.

Designed primarily to encourage creative writing and practical writing, writing workshops for college credit are being offered.

Lancaster To Test NU Med By-Laws

A trend throuout the nation, whereby university hospitals are looking for means to supplement their budgets, is being followed in Nebraska.

Board of Regents of the University adopted a by-law this spring which provides that the counties will pay for expensive medicines used in caring for the patients from their area. The by-law adopted under the Nebraska statute gives the Board of Regents authority to lay down rules for admission to the university hospital.

First claim filed in Nebraska has been filed against Lancaster county. It was discussed at a meeting of the board of commissioners. The bill of $39.97 is for medicines used in treatment of Lancaster county patients at the hospital. The board tabled the claim, after deciding that representatives from the Board of Regents, their attorney and the county attorney should be notified to appear before the next meeting of the commissioners.

R. W. DeVoe, president of the Board of Regents, said that if the county disallows the claim, the Board will appeal it to the district court.
