

Marines At Seoul Gateway Red Forces Move to Front

Both good and bad news was recorded Wednesday in Korea.

Although South Korean marines landed at Samchok and U.N. troops were "at the gateway of Seoul," U.S. Tenth army officers reported to Gen. Douglas MacArthur that a column of communist reinforcements was moving south from Manchuria.

A beachhead was established by the South Korean marines at Samchok, 105 miles north of Pohang, on the Korean east coast. Just how many troops had landed or exactly when the landing was made was not yet learned.

A spokesman presumed that the amphibious assault, which marked a third front in Korea, was in sufficient force to hold the beachhead.

Across Peninsula
The city is across the Korean peninsula from Inchon where the U.S. First marine and Seventh army divisions landed and are pounding at Seoul's gates.

At the same time the column of reinforcements heading down from Manchuria, was said to consist of 200 vehicles, including tanks. It was reported to be coming from the Manchurian city of Antung.

Meanwhile French forces were reported unofficially Wednesday night to have recaptured the strategic northern frontier outpost on Dongkhe from Viet-Minh communists. French troops, battling what may be a large-scale communist attempt to seize control of Indo-China, cut down a battalion of communist troops in a slaughterhouse attack.

Formosa Introduced
At Flushing, N. Y., the United States placed the problem of Formosa before the United Nations general assembly Wednesday and proposed a program to provide the world organization with standing military forces for use against aggressors.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson also proposed that the U.N. establish a "U.N. recovery force" to send resources and personnel to aid in the reconstruction of Korea once the communist invasion has been "crushed as it deserves to be." He also accused Russia of being "the main obstacle to peace."

That the world organization will survive has been proven by the Korean war, Acheson continued. "Blood is thicker than ink," he said.

In Berlin, East-West tension boiled into a new "cold-war" flare-up Wednesday when Russian soldiers tried to seize a part of the British sector of the city.

British Arrive
When confronted by British officials backed by 100 troops in armored cars bristling with machine guns, the Russians withdrew. The number was undetermined.

The incident occurred after sudden mass arrests of sector police, kinnapings and new Russian pressure to squeeze the Western occupation sectors.

The Soviet sector officials announced also that they would cut electrical power in the Western sector by half at midnight Wednesday night by shutting off all current going from the East to the West.

There were difficulties seen in this country Wednesday also. Gen. George C. Marshall stood Wednesday at the door to perhaps the most difficult office he ever held in 48 years as a soldier and statesman.

Only certain senate confirmation of his appointment and the formality of administering an oath were needed to make him the nation's third secretary of defense.

Hard Job
If there was any doubt that the job is hard and demanding, the record should erase the doubt.

James Forrestal, first secretary, collapsed under the pressure, and Louis Johnson, caught up in interdepartmental controversy, and congressional criticism, was forced to resign.

The president of the American Bar association said Tuesday night the 17-year record of federal judiciary appointments by President Truman and the late President Roosevelt marks a return to the "spoils system policy."

The association president said "it is wrong to appoint men to the bench purely because they have rendered service to the party in power. If such men are entitled to some reward, let them be rewarded in some other way."

Coed Threatened
A terror-stricken 18-year-old bride-to-be is under police protection in New Orleans because a skulking night prowler whistling a funeral dirge has threatened her life.

The girl, Jacquelyn Chadow, says she will wed, even if she has to have a policeman escort her down the aisle.

The prowler had whistled his mournful funeral march beneath the girl's window at her home in Paradis, La., for many nights.

The defense department said Wednesday that there had been 13,911 Korean war casualties whose next of kin had been notified through Sept. 15.

The counseling consists of an initial conference with an assigned counselor, a test, if the student and the counselor feel it necessary, and usually two more counselor-student meetings.

Any student who needs this service is urged by the Junior division to make an appointment with their office to meet with one of the counselors.

Events Varied

Events sponsored by Kosmet Klub include production of the Fall Revue which features skits by several fraternities, and a spring show.

During the Revue, Prince Kosmet and the Nebraska Sweetheart are presented during a special ceremony.

Following the Revue, plans are announced for the Spring Show which is usually a musical comedy. A variation for the Show this year is being contemplated, according to Pfeiffer. This spring, coeds may be permitted to participate. In the past, only male students have taken part in the production. A go-ahead is now being sought for coed participation and will be authorized if it is affirmed by the student body.

Another annual affair sponsored by the Klub is the Interfraternity Sing which is held during Ivy Day. A cup is presented by the Klub to the fraternity who has been judged best among the men's groups.

Temporary plans

In regards to temporary plans, Pfeiffer said that several special projects still in the embryo stage have been started. Announcement of these projects will be made at a later date.

Definitely planned to be held this year are Klub-sponsored talent shows. In addition, a concert series program is being considered as a new Klub sponsored program.

Kosmet Klub has only one counterpart—the Mask and Wig at Harvard. This summer, the organization helped to begin a similar group at Washington State University.

Faculty advisor of the Kosmet Klub is Prof. E. W. Schramm.

Charters
The following is a description of the characters given by Graunke as they appear in the drama:

An ancient Greek guide acting as narrator leads the audience throughout the entirety of the tragedy and explains the actions of the players.

Antigone is the heroine who is motivated by high ideals. She refuses to compromise with evil; does not care much about her own appearance and is typical throughout the play as a "tomboy." She is straightforward and has definite beliefs about the rights of humanity. She adopts the role of a martyr when she attempts to bury her brother, Polynices, against the orders of the Creon, regent of Thebes.

An older woman who is a companion of Antigone is the nurse. She runs the household in a comical but gruff manner.

Antigone's sister, Ismene, is constantly pursued by the young men of Thebes. She attempts to persuade Antigone against being "so interested in mankind."

Other Parts
The new king or regent, son of Creon, is Haemon. He is engaged to be married to Antigone and has the reputation of a great lover.

The present regent, Creon, knows how to handle people but is also very ruthless. The paradox shows him as a dictator who is cruel and demanding.

Prominent as Creon's henchmen are the guards who are present at the courts following the capture of Antigone.

The Messenger is the foreboding prophet who is always long-faced and sad.

A sort of Lord Fauntleroy part is played by the Page.

Wife of Creon, the present regent, is Eurydice, queen of Thebes.
