

Huskers in Final Home Appearance

By Bill Mundell

A lot of spirit and enthusiasm by the Husker faithful is needed this Saturday to help the Cornhuskers finish the football season undefeated in their home stadium, according to Head Coach Bill Glassford today. Coach Glassford said that the fans would have to continue their fine showings of spirit that they have in the past to carry the gridders to another triumph, this time over the determined Iowa State Cyclones.

The Cyclones will invade Memorial Stadium Saturday convinced that they can duplicate the feat Colorado performed earlier in the season and they say they'll do it through the passing wizardry of Billy Weeks and receiving mate Jim Doran.

Drills

The Huskers went through their usual drills Thursday night in preparation for the Cyclone invasion. Contact work was a minimum, but fundamentals in offense and defense were stressed.

A lot of spirit was displayed by the gridders as they were put through their paces by Glassford and his assistants.

Both the offensive and defensive platoons faced freshmen outfits. The varsity defense concentrated on Iowa State plays while the varsity offense concentrated on their own.

The Huskers will be at full strength for the contest with the exception of fullback Kay Curtis. Curtis will be out of the fray with a broken rib. Curtis' position as defensive halfback will be taken over by Tony Winey, who started in that spot last week against the K-Staters.

Wingender Back

back. Curtis' loss will be eased with the return of Bill Wingender. Wingender has been out of action since the Colorado contest with leg injuries, but is slated as ready to go against the Cyclones.

The Huskers are preparing to serve the Iowans a little of their own medicine as the offense brushed up on their passing attack. If the game develops into an aerial battle, it will be Weeks against Fran Nagle, which isn't a bad match. Nagle has been consistent in his passing all year and has grown more accurate as the season progresses.

Art Bauer and Nagle have been named as co-captains for the home finale. Both will see action on the starting offensive lineup, Bauer as guard and Nagle as quarterback.

There will be no change in the starting lineups that started the game last week, according to Glassford, but he expects help from several men that came through against Kansas State.

Bowl Opponents Still Not Certain; Only Cal Favored

Iowa State Blocks Huskers Post Season Chances

The University of California appears certain to be playing football on New Year's day, but to date, that is the only grid outfit that can count heavily on a bowl bid.

Usually this far along in the season, the bowl competitors have been pretty well settled, but not this year of offensive-happy, upset-crazy teams.

The Golden Bear seems destined to the Rose Bowl for the third straight year. All they need is a win over Stanford this week to finish unbeaten in the Pacific Coast conference and therefore on top. And that is all it takes to get to the Rose celebration in Pasadena.

Whether or not Texas will be Cotton Bowl-ing come January first is something else again.

Texas Uncertain

The Texas-Texas A. & M. game looms larger than ever in the eyes of the Southwest Conference and the rest of the football world. Only because that game is played at home does Texas rate an edge over the Aggies.

In line play, A. & M. has never been humbled by any opponent it has played against this year. The Aggies have outscored the Longhorns 42 touchdowns to 26. But, Texas' defense appears to be tougher, in that only 17 touchdowns were scored against them while 22 were made against the Aggies.

The Sooners of Oklahoma, currently victorious in 28 straight contests, have the inside track as the other team in the Cotton Bowl at the present time. However, things here are none too definite either. They also have strength behind their backing for the Sugar Bowl which is even bigger and better.

If not Oklahoma, then the loser of the Tennessee-Kentucky game will undoubtedly head for Dallas with the winner slated for the Sugar classic in New Orleans.

Changed Their Tunes

The sports writers of New Orleans have altered their opinions because of the Texas A. & M. defeat of Southern Methodist. They had SMU in the Sugar Bowl with Kentucky as an opponent.

To decide the Orange Bowl teams is also no easy task. Clemson, with only a 14-14 tie with South Carolina against it, has a good chance with the possibility of Miami being the other, or local team. But Miami's faltering with a 13-13 tie against Louisville lost much flavor.

As to who will face the Bears of California in the Rose Bowl, well, that's up to the Big Ten. Ohio State looms as a sure thing to walk away with the Big Ten title, but the Buckeyes cannot journey to the West Coast because they played there last year. The Big Ten Rose Bowl ruling to that effect is that no team from their conference may play a post-season contest more than once in three years—the Buckeyes have two years to go.

More Games

Wisconsin may get the nod merely on the strength of playing seven league games as compared to six for Illinois and Michigan. If Wisconsin beats Minnesota while the Buckeyes are disposing of Illinois and Michigan—which is supposed to happen—then the Badgers would sport a 5-2 record and the Illini and Wolverines, 4-2. And Wisconsin would get the bowl game.

Should Ohio State lose to the Illini next Saturday, then Illinois will be Cal's foe if it conquers Northwestern in its final game.

Michigan has to beat Northwestern this week and Ohio State next weekend to get the nod—providing Illinois loses a game somewhere.

As it stands now, Ohio State should stomp on its opponents. So if Wisconsin beats Minnesota, the Badgers will win a trip to Pasadena.

Huskers Possible

The Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla., is reported interested in Nebraska among many others for a bowl contest New Year's day. If the Huskers can get over their Iowa State hurdle and then turn in a good performance against the powerful Sooners, they stand a good chance of journeying Southward.

Williams May Quit Baseball

Ted Williams, the mighty Red Sox outfielder, put Boston on notice Thursday that he would not play in any exhibition games this spring "if I'm not feeling right."

Williams also said he would not "go through another spring training like last year. I'll be in complete command of my training."

The lanky slugger added that he had not discussed his plans with anyone "and I don't care whether Joe Cronin (general manager of the Red Sox) or anyone else knows about it."

"If I had enough money, I wouldn't play next season," Williams said. "I would quit right now but I will have to play for a while to get the money I need. High taxes have kept me from saving what I need for retiring."

Williams arrived in Miami, Fla., Wednesday night for a fishing trip to the Florida keys and to rest his left arm, fractured in the All-Star game last July.

"Don't misunderstand me," he added. "I owe everything I've got and know to baseball, but I wouldn't keep on playing just for the love of the game. I don't love it that much."

"I won't become a slave to baseball like some people."

'Bee Bowl' Game Slated Saturday

The first bowl game of the year will be played this Saturday morning on the Ag College football fields. The "Bee Bowl" will get under way at 10 a. m. Saturday featuring the final of the fraternity "B" grid playoffs.

Phi Delta Theta "B" and Alpha Tau Omega "B" will face each other for the second time this year for the fraternity "B" championship. The Taus were soundly beaten by the junior Phi Deltas early in regular season play by a 17-0 score.

The final grid ratings for All-University and all divisions will be in Monday's paper.
