

Truman Will Talk To Nation President to Call For Emergency

President Truman's Friday night broadcast to the nation will precede his declaration of a national emergency Saturday. The President's speech will explain that this and other action is necessary to meet the grave crisis facing the country and the world. He will go on the air at 9:30 p. m. (c.s.t.)

Ranking democratic and republican members of the senate and house banking committees, the joint atomic energy committee and the joint congressional economic committee met with Mr. Truman and urged him to go ahead with his plans for a declaration of a national emergency. The emergency measures would entail a faster buildup of the nation's armed forces, partial mobilization of the home front and perhaps some price-wage controls.

U. N. Approves Cease-Fire Plan
A Korean cease-fire plan, sponsored by India and 12 other Asian and middle east countries, was approved Thursday by the United Nations assembly.

Russia's Jacob Malik fought to defeat the measure on the grounds that it would give the United States and Britain a chance to prepare a new attack. The resolution would give Assembly President Acheson the power to appoint two others to help him find out what can be done to get Red China to agree to stop fighting.

Whatever this three-man commission decides should be done will then be laid before the assembly for approval. Delegates expressed hopes that this will be done quickly.

Allied Beachhead Grows Smaller
The Allied forces beachhead in northeast Korea was shrinking Thursday as an estimated 100,000 Chinese were putting pressure on the forces Thursday.

From three directions an estimated ten Chinese divisions were massing on the U. N. forces. A Chinese division numbers between 8,000 to 10,000 men.

Near northern Manchuria, the biggest jet-against-jet air battles ever fought were waged Thursday. The growing red jet fighter activities indicate that the communist air force is starting to wage an all-out air war in Korea, an air force spokesman said in Washington.

Colleges Valuable Asset In War Says Gustavson

American universities and colleges are among the nation's most valuable assets in war as well as in peacetime, Chancellor R. G. Gustavson told members of the Nebraska Guernsey Breeders association meeting at the University Thursday.

"A university," he said, "is one wartime asset that does not become surplus in time of peace. A university is an investment house; not a gambling casino where you take your chances on war as opposed to peace."

The Chancellor said, "All of us hope and pray that a third world war can be avoided but in the light of recent events we would be foolish to ignore the threat we face."

If war comes, Dr. Gustavson predicted it would be long, perhaps 10 years, and "I fear it would make World Wars I and II look like sham battles."

In such a conflict, he said, Nebraska's major role again would be the production of food, and whether war comes or not, Nebraska needs to give attention to better land use and livestock improvement.

"A war would demand our top agricultural performance in both the growing of crops and the production of livestock, and it would be a tragic mistake to deprive Nebraska of the leadership that an adequately-supported college of agriculture could provide," he said.

It is doubtful, he said, whether Nebraska's soil could again take the punishment of wartime production without better methods for immediate restoration of fertility. He cited soil depletion by high protein bean crops as the type of problem agriculturalists must solve.

At the present time, he pointed out, more than 1,500,000 acres in northern Nebraska are in serious need of reclaiming, a job in which the University could be of real help if given the necessary financial support.

Soil Fertility
Soil fertility in Nebraska's western irrigated land, the Chancellor said, is already curtailing production. "It is a problem which our College of Agriculture could help solve," he said.

The University, he explained, has a real opportunity to conduct a practical livestock research program at Fort Robinson but cannot realize it without adequate financial support from the state.

Chancellor Gustavson recalled that U. S. development of the atomic bomb resulted from work in university laboratories. He said the bomb was by no means the only contribution colleges made during World War II and told of research in radar, uranium studies, language training, and development of anti-malaria drugs. The University he said, contributed much to the solution of the malaria problem.

Universities all across the nation, Dr. Gustavson said, are aware of demands for more knowledge in the fields of medicine and agriculture.
