Dr. Lancaster Reports On Visits To Yale, Cal

He's been around! Dr. Lane Lancaster, chairman of the political science department, has been a visiting professor at Yale, the University of California and the University of Hawaii during his two-year absence from the University. "At Yale, an instructor is not confronted with the problem of flunking students," Lancaster said, "but, whether to give the student a 75 or 80." Students maintaining an 80 average, Lancaster explained, have their name added to the Dean's honor list. In order to enroll at Yale, students must be approved by the college board, pass the entrance examination or have attended certain recognized prep schools, he said. "More interest in politics and current affairs was shown by the Yale students of junior or senior level than is shown by Nebraska students," Lancaster said. "The students were more aware of world affairs and read more books than our students."

DR. LANE LANCASTER

Lancaster was approached to take the loyalty oath at the University of California, but refused to take the oath or to sign the compromise statement. Under the compromise, Lancaster explained, instructors sign a statement each year stating their loyalty instead of taking the oath. "Professors and instructors objected to the oath on the principle of being singled out as those who were required to state their loyalty, he said. Lancaster's Refusal "Since I was a visiting professor," Lancaster stated, "and my term was to expire soon, nothing was done about my refusal." The faculty of the University of California have taken upon themselves a 2 per cent tax of their salaries, he said, to aid the 19 professors and numerous graduate instructors dismissed because of their refusal to take the loyalty oath. Lancaster taught state and local Government during the 1950 summer session at the University of Hawaii at Honolulu. In the class of 42 students, 40 were oriental, the majority Japanese, and a few Chinese, Koreans and Hawaiians. "It was difficult to get the students to discuss problems in class," Lancaster said, "because the Japanese home is under control of the parents. The practice of being seen but not heard was carried over to the class room. However they were very faithful in preparing assignments and learning the material."

Art Gallery Talks Continue; Moore, Sutherland Work Topic

The works of artists Henry Moore and Graham Sutherland will be discussed at the second in a series of art gallery talks at Morrill hall Sunday, April 22, at 3:30 p.m. Norman Geske, assistant director of the galleries, will have as his guests, Miss Jean Larson of the University's art faculty and Mrs. Peter Worth. They will discuss the artists' works which have recently been acquired for the Frank M. Hall collection. Sutherland and Moore have attained international standing in the field of art. Moore is represented by sculptures in eight other American museums and in 1947 was honored with a comprehensive retrospective exhibition at the Chicago Art Institute, The Museum of Modern Art in New York City and the San Francisco Museum of Art. The family group acquired by the University is one of the seven castings of this particular version of the subject. Others belong to the British Council and the National Gallery of Victoria at Melbourne, Australia. Sutherland is represented in only two other American museums, the Museum of Modern Art and the Albright Gallery in Buffalo, N. Y. His "Palm and House" dating from 1947, comes from a particularly important phase of the artist's career, following by only one year the completion of a "Crucifixion" for the Church of St. Matthew at Northampton, England, where a "Madonna and Child" by Moore had been installed in 1944.

Horseplay, Songs, Hard Work Included in Musical's Rehearsal

The best news on campus right now is "Good News." It's the hilarious musical comedy straight from the roarin' '20's that will be presented April 25, 26, and 27 at the Nebraska theater. Rehearsals are being held every night (including week-ends, from 7 until 10 and after. The entire cast is expected to be there every night and it's a long, hard grind. After hearing just one night of rehearsals, though, it is quite obvious that the final product will be well worth all of the work being done by the cast and directors. Perfectionism Dallas Williams, director, is a perfectionist who insists that every line and every note of the songs be sung as directed. It is because of him and his assistant, Jack Wendstrand that the "college kids" in the show are slowly turning into professional players. So far all practicing has been done in the Temple. With chairs for blocking and imagination for props the cast has worked up a production that will be "the best thing on this campus since girls arrived." Rehearsals are a lot of hard work, but there is time for a little fun quite often. With Patsy Dutton and Betty Lester in the chorus there just have to be jokes now and then. Outstanding Couple Another outstanding couple who are likely to steal the show are Lois Nelson and Jack Chedester. Their songs are terrific and lines, though a bit corny at times, always leave the audience weak from laughter. So it goes at rehearsals—horseplay, songs and hard work. The cast has put in a lot of time and effort for "Good News" but when you see the play any night during College Days, you'll agree with the experts . . . that "Good News" is the best news.

Engineers Elect Prien President

The Society of American Military Engineers held an election of officers for the coming year last week. Pohn D. Prien was named president of the organization; Victor E. Sedlacek, vice-president; Gene R. Norton, secretary and Donald L. Mattox, treasurer. After the election the group discussed the displays for College Days. Movies were shown that depicted the importance of military aircraft during invasions and bombing attacks. The next meeting was set for Thursday, April 19 at 7:30 p.m. at the Military and Naval Science

Indian Exchange Student Gives Campus Impressions

"Nebraska where the climate is cold, but the hearts are warm," so said Nella Veni Subramurthy, a University student from India. "Have you ever wondered what it is like to go across the waters to a foreign country—to become acquainted with the country's people and try to adjust yourself to their customs and ideas? Nella wondered and so she came to this strange land—the United States and Nebraska. August 4, 1950 was the memorable day that Nella came to the United States. She will stay here but one year; then she will return to her husband in India. Nutrition Major All of the University students have probably seen Nella on campus and wondered just why she came here. She came here to gain an education in nutrition, so that she can help India develop into a great nation as the United States. Nella said that one of India's main problems is that of nutrition. She was a social worker before she came to the United States and has seen the people of India die because of their diet. Madras, India's great merchant center, Nella's hometown. This town is located in the southern part of India. The religions in that section of India are mostly Hindu, Mohammedanism, Christianity and Buddhism; although the followers of Buddhism have decreased in the last years. Nella said that communism is spreading throughout India again because of the lack of food. The people desire to have plenty of food, and communism promises that, after their hunger has been fulfilled they will want their freedom for individuality. "America is just what I expected," said Nella. She did not have any fantastic ideas that America was a great land of paradise where there aren't any problems.
