Scientists Find No Cure For Colds, Only Relief

Can you cure a cold?

It is doubtful, according to an article prepared for the Scientific American magazine by Christopher Howard Andrewes.

"There are things that can be done to relieve the unpleasantness of colds," he says, "but up to the present it still remains true that the untreated cold will last about seven days, while with careful treatment it can be cured in a week!"

Andrewes give two reasons why the cure for colds has eluded man:

"(1) Colds are not a serious disease.

"(2) No convenient experimental animal for investigating the worth. Photo Lab features camera tips, developing process, and field trips. So grab your Brownie and tie yourself down to Photo Lab (headquarters: Faculty Lounge, Union) on Fridays from 10 until 12 o'clock. Professor Ray Morgan, of the school of journalism, will be on hand to instruct.

Tuesday morning a capacity crowd heard a panel discuss "How Can America Best State Her Case Abroad?" Members of the panel were Dr. LeRoy Lasse, department of speech, Ken Greenwood, KFOR, and Raymond McConnell, editor of the Lincoln Journal.

cold virus can be found." (While chimpanzees are susceptible to the cold virus, they are so hard to get and handle and are so expensive that they are almost useless, according to the writer.)

Nevertheless, a great deal has been done in recent research to find cure for colds. Andrewes reports that experiments performed by the Common Cold Research Unit of the Medical Research Council at Salisbury, England, have uncovered several facts concerning the cold.

Scientists there, he writes, have found that three factors create colds—"a germ, a person ripe for infection and conditions suitable for the transfer of the cold virus to the person."

Women More Susceptible

They also found, according to Andrewes, that women are more susceptible to colds than men. Another discovery mentioned in his article is that the "cold virus is not affected by streptomycin or penicillin."

More is known about carriers than about cures.

Infectious particles may float in a room for an hour after a person sneezes, according to the writer. It is also known, he says, that germs may be redistributed by dusting and sweeping, and that hands are one of the most effective distributors of germs.
