By HAL HASSELBALCH Staff Reporter
Actor Jesse White showed the only glint of an expected array of glittering personalities when he introduced six other members of a troupe of Hollywood film stars on the Union steps Monday afternoon.

By ARTHUR RAUCH Staff Reporter
Richard Widmark is "really a good egg."

Student Dick Carson's welcoming speech to the contingent sounded as "professional" as any words mumbled by any one of the visiting group with the exception of White who carried the show.

STUDENT INTERVIEWS STAR—Before a governor's luncheon for visiting film stars, Richard Widmark, (left) who says he's trying to live down the nasty laugh that helped make him famous in movies, answers questions for Art Rauch, University of Nebraska student, (right). Zazu Pitts, John Derek, Diane Cassidy, Barbara Ruick, Jesse White, all Hollywood actors, Director John Farrow and Screen Writer Johathan Latimer, were in Lincoln to open a tour through the state as part of Nebraska's observances of the 50th anniversary of the motion picture theater.

"In Sunrise, Minnesota," Widmark replied, "I was brought up in this part of the country. I lived in Sunrise only six months when we moved to Sioux Falls, where I lived and went to school up to the sixth grade. I went through high school and college in Illinois."

Other persons associated with the industry John Latimer, writer; John Farrell, director; and movie pioneer Zazu Pitts equalled their cohorts in eloquence.

Students Are Despair Or Hope Of World-Knowles

The Hollywood troupe was here reputedly on a good will tour for the movies in connection with the fiftieth anniversary of the flickers and the Movietime USA campaign.

Traveling all night after a game on Saturday and appearing bruised and black-eyed in the pulpit on Sunday morning, Rev. Knowles decided to enter the ministry after he was graduated from college. "I was only a moderate success in college," he said, "so I decided to do something significant."

A meager turnout of University students might have caused the epidemic of heavy tongues. The troupe arrived with no more pomp than that given by a police siren. A pep band assembled for the occasion became side tracked and did not arrive on the scene until they were forgotten. Then it would have been as impressive to let them stay that way, forgotten.

University students are either the hope or the despair of the world," he said. "We need fear only educated people. Simple people are limited in power because of their lack of knowledge."

Another ironic angle is that TV sets throughout the campus were focused on the World Series with-holding many others from the Union meeting. No doubt the sets by movie-goers was no small factor behind the Hollywood campaign. Screaming the slogan "Movies are better than ever," movie magnates have been attempting to regain audiences lost to video.

Rev. Knowles has accepted work at Wayne, Kearney, Chadron and Peru. He will also speak at the University of Oklahoma, Texas and Florida during their respective Religion in Life Weeks.

Future visits of screen personalities will have to be better organized and richer in content than the last one. Widmark and company did much to upset any glittering illusions created by Charles Laughton and other members of the Drama Quartette.

Rev. Knowles is not content with directing activities in Presby House. He also wants the opportunity to confront the entire campus with religion in some form.

He would like to see closer union of student houses on campus, non-compulsory student chapel service and a department of religion offering courses in religion.

Pre-School Children Receive Training In Speech, Hearing Correction At NU

Special training for pre-school age children with speech and hearing difficulties began Monday at the University in the speech and hearing laboratories at the Temple building.

The pre-school work was started on an experimental basis this summer and of the 10 handicapped children enrolled, five started kindergarten in September.

Lucile Cypreansen is the supervisor and Mrs. Madge Miller is the group instructor. Dr. John Wiley directs the laboratories. University seniors and graduate students interested in speech education gain practical experience by helping with the children.

The University is one of the few schools in the country offering this type of service. The Lincoln Parents Council for Cerebral Palsy, Nebraska Society for Crippled Children and the Lincoln Junior League cooperate to make the training possible.

Group activities include singing, action and speech games. Daily tea parties help children with hearing losses receive training using amplification. Dr. Wiley meets with parents regularly for discussion and suggestions.

The laboratories are trying to establish a technique of approach and to evaluate growth and improvement. The children are rated according to abilities in relation to speech adequacy; social adjustment; ability to follow directions and carry out instructions; ability to draw, color and copy; ability to use coordinated movements in play; to feed self to manipulate toys; and to play meaningfully with toys and with other children.

All of the activities follow a play approach in a permissive attitude, as much as possible. The project acts as a practice laboratory for students in special education, too. A number of research projects are being planned in conjunction with the program.

The clinic gained international recognition this summer when a news story was requested for possible publication in 75 foreign countries by an agency of the state department in Washington.

Husker Migrants Battle Rain, Mud At K-State

It was 6 a. m. when the crusading group of Husker rooters assembled for their trek into Kansas.

The small groups, having heard of open houses that were being held, scampered off to them. From all reports, food was good and many foot warmers were available.

The sun had just begun to peep over the horizon in the east by the time the tribe got loaded onto the train. It was indeed a bedraggled looking bunch, but as the train began to move up to top speed, it began to perk up a bit.

Still, there was time to see the town. No one managed to get too much of a glimpse of it, however. Everyone was either busy defrosting or was just plain turned around and mixed up.

Perhaps it was the track that did it. The route had been mapped out for freight trains originally. The jostling around which resulted from the bumpiness and unevenness of the rails was enough to bring even the most unconscious person out of a coma.

When 8 p. m. rolled around, the tired Husker troupe, with its fuchsia (rain-faded red and white) shakers, boarded the train in the Manhattan station.

Then the fireworks started. Cigarette sales started booming. So did cups of coffee. The two in combination melted the icicles hanging from everyone's nose. Circulation commenced.

The band began to make the rounds. It went from car to car. As soon as enough members crowded into one of the cubicles, it would blast forth with "Hail to the Team" or "There is No Place Like Home."

By that time, some people were beginning to wonder if there was some other place besides that train. To many, it seemed like centuries that they had been stuck off in their small corners.

Finally, after a number of jolts and false alarm stops, the train came to a grinding halt.

Mrs. Hevelone reported that all Nebraska alumni who are not active members of the association are being contacted by letters. Later a personal contact drive will start.

Upon getting out to stretch their weary bones and preparing to exercise their lungs, the backers of the scarlet and cream found the weather had played tricks on them. It was raining.

It kept on raining, too. And when it wasn't raining, the mud was knee deep and the slime an inch deep on the sidewalks.

After grabbing a bite to eat, the crowd dispersed in little groups and headed for the game.

More confusion followed. Dispersing into groups and heading for the game were fundamental processes. Charting the course and getting there were something else again.

Then came the highlight of the day. At last they saw banners waving and people cheering. Spirit was running high.
