Campus Coeds Now Hunting Widows As Males Leave For Weekly Trip

By BOBBIE RUSSELL Staff Writer

Alas, the poor females! With the arrival of hunting season the weaker sex is at a loss. The reason for this, naturally, the big, husky heroes are off for parts unknown supposedly for a week-end of hunting!

During this time, dates are unheard of. A poll was conducted recently which showed that normally 95 per cent of the fair sex have dates every week-end. During hunting season this number drops to 25 per cent. The campus is literally dead!

This time of year also brings other problems to the girls. Take the case of Joe and Jane. Joe, along with his crew of men, go out Friday morning, jump into their car, and are off, all set for a big, glorious week-end! Now the question on Jane's mind is "Will Joe come back to me in one piece or with a hole through his precious little head?"

Joe will undoubtedly have his mind on poor, neglected Jane sitting at home all week-end throughout the whole trip and fall to see in which direction his friend John is aiming his gun. The consequences will leave Joe sprawled out in some clump of weeds!

Girls! Do you want your loved one to end up in this kind of a predicament? No, of course you don't. So get busy? When Joe and his friends jump in a car some Friday morning all set to take off, drag them back! We can't let the wild animals get the best of us and our masculine friends.

300 Attend Ag Barbecue

Approximately 300 poultrymen and their wives attended the annual chicken barbecue at the College of Agriculture Tuesday evening. The barbecue was part of the poultry field day held each year on campus.

Prof. F. E. Mussehl, chairman of the University poultry department, gave an illustrated talk on time saving in poultry feeding.

Extension poultryman Walde F. Aubol of the College of Agriculture led the poultry field day crowd in a tour of the institution's poultry plant. They saw a series of feed experiments, including anti-biotic tests. Experiments to date indicate the antibiotics show good results when the feed ration is poor.

Other speakers for the event were J. R. Redditt of Omaha and F. Old Bethke of St. Louis.

UMOC Candidate Tells His Troubles; New Title Makes Him Marked Man

By U. M. CANDIDATE Ugly Staff Writer

Have you ever wondered what it would feel like to be a candidate for the rare privilege of having the "Ugliest Mug" on the campus. I did, that is, until I became a candidate for the UMOC.

It all started in what I thought was a meeting to choose Prince Kosmet, in which someone mentioned my name, and the motion was seconded. Then I was asked to tell why I ought to be a candidate.

"I really don't have the physique to make a good candidate," I modestly stated, "But I could try."

Then the nominations were closed, and I was elected. I thanked them cordially, and stated that it was a real privilege to be elected Prince Kosmet candidate. They looked at me and laughed and laughed.

"Man, you're one of the UMOC candidates," they all gleefully chimed in.

Once the tag was on, I became a marked man. Little children shunned me, little dogs bit me, and even my friends, and I use the term loosely, could find no greater pleasure than in telling me "They couldn't have picked a better man."

But what really hurts me is that I have to thank them when they sincerely say "Congratulations,"—the little rascals.

Once I was told that some enchanted evening I would meet a stranger. Well, since I was elected a UMOC candidate, there have been a lot of evenings, enchanted in one way or another, and I have met a lot of strangers. The only trouble with this, is that the longer I am with them, the stranger they seem.

You see, once you have become a candidate, you might as well forget about fraternizing with women. It seems that everytime I am trying to impress some young lady, a fraternity brother
