This view was presented to a meeting of Delta Sigma Pi, pro-fessional business fraternity, Monday by Edward Gillette, state civilian defense director.

"If a city is conscious of civilian defense," he said, "and the precautionary means we know today, from 12 to 30 per cent of the lives otherwise lost might be saved."

If the Japanese had been more mindful of civilian defense in the last war, he explained, their atomic losses would not have been nearly so great.

"The man destructive force of atomic warfare comes from three factors," Gillette said, "the blast, Pinning Congratulations Stereotyped: factors," Gillette said, "the heat and radioactivity." His points were illustrated by
