Black Masque Ball Provides Leap Year Preview

By JOYCE JOHNSON Staff Writer
Now is the time for all good women to take the bull by the horns!

Don't think that this is a campaign for female participation in bulldogging contests in local rodeos, but rather an outward meditation on the fact that ye old Black Masque ball is fast approaching.

To attend the ball this year might be the goal of every University coed, judging from a few vital statistics.

First, the ball will give the coed her first introduction to the leap year season—now only 41 days away.

The extra spice of wearing black masks during the evening of the ball will lend the New Orleans Mardi Gras and extract some of the color of the bygone colonial balls.

Incidentally, if your date happens to be a "murd," "dud," "jick," or left over from the draft, the black mask will be a convenient and tactical way of covering up the evidence. Ah yes, the Mortar Board ball is the time for a girl truly to express her feelings.

'HOW CURIOUS' . . .

Malone, Author-Painter, Wins With 'Long Shots'

"How Curious . . ." This is not an expression of amazement, but the name of the Marvin Malone's poem which was chosen by the National Poetry Association to appear in the Anthology of College Poetry.

Malone, a graduate student in pharmacology and pharmacy, commented that "How Curious . . ."

The girl holds the strings (purse or otherwise) and can be a charming hostess or a demon in disguise. Her self-expression is fully brought out in the type of corsage she manufactures for her companion.

Advice to the males should emphasize cooperation in this matter. For—it will be only a few more weeks before the coeds can again legally ask you to dine and dance at their expense.

During his undergraduate career in the University, Malone won the Delian Union short story contest twice. His experience in the avocational writing field earned him the opportunity to conduct last year's Delian awards presentations.

Though Malone has never had a formal course in writing, he enjoys writing immensely. Malone commented that his ideas usually "just come to him."

Writing is not the only field in which Malone has excelled. Painting also takes a place high on his list of interests. He has won several firsts at the State Fair for some of his paintings.

Malone commented on his Anthology award by saying, "I've gone on long shots before and some of them have come through, so it's worth it to take a chance."

So far, Malone's "long shots" have paid off very well for him.

'Mile.' Appoints Moyer, Gorton

Two University coeds, Phyllis Moyer and Sue Gorton, copped victories on the annual college board contest sponsored by Mademoiselle magazine.

a marriage license, or excerpts from her diary, her date may well assume that his escort has only eyes for him.

However, a corsage containing onions, toothpaste or a one-way ticket to the salt mines of Siberia may infer to the male that this is the coed's way of saying "scram Sam."

Smith won a chance to represent the state in the farm organization's national contest next month. He is majoring in animal husbandry.

The contest was held during the first night session of the Nebraska Farm Bureau federation during the bureau's three-day, 33rd annual convention at the Lincoln hotel.

One of the University's male students returned from Thanksgiving looking like he had been scalped. No hair on his head measured over one-quarter inch in length.

The explanation he gave for this somewhat unbecoming condition: The barber slippe. At last report, he was thinking of handling out mimeographed explanations of what happened. His friends were driving him crazy with questions.
