Movie To Show Prehistoric Paintings In French Caves

A film depicting the prehistoric paintings recently found in caves near Montignac, France will be shown Sunday, Dec. 2, and Tuesday, Dec. 4, under the joint sponsorship of the Nebraska state museum and the University art galleries.

The first showing will take place in the auditorium of the state museum Sunday at 3:30 p.m. In addition, Dr. Bertha C. Koch, head of the art department of the University of Omaha, will show kodachrome slides made last summer when she visited the French caves. She will give her personal impressions of the cave sites.

The film, entitled "Lascaux, Cradle of Man's Art," depicts the wall paintings discovered in 1940 by two French boys who were trying to rescue their dog from a deep hole into which it had fallen during a hunting expedition.

In addition to a thorough examination of the cave and its paintings, the film shows some other sites in the neighborhood and tells briefly the story of prehistoric man.

The movie will be shown a second time Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. in Gallery B of the University art galleries.
