ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION...

PBK 175 Years Old

DR. LOUISE POUND

And many happy returns of the day! Phi Beta Kappa, arts and science scholastic honorary, is celebrating its 175th anniversary today.

oath of secrecy, a badge, mottoes, a code of laws, an elaborate initiation and a distinctive handclasp. The main attraction of the PBK's was given to literary exercises, particularly composition and debating.

Fifty men were admitted to membership in the chapter's first four years. Many of the fifty later distinguished themselves in public life. Two—Bushrod Washington and John Marshall—became members of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Three important changes marked Phi Beta Kappa's first century. They were removal of the secrecy requirement, transition from a literary society to an honor society, and admission of women to membership.

By 1883, there were 20 active chapters which formed the National Council of the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa. Since the organization of the united chapters, the society has recognized three classes of members; undergraduates, alumni and honorary.

Undergraduates are elected from candidates for degrees in liberal arts and sciences, usually among the upper tenth of the graduating class. Of some 5,000 members elected annually, about 90 percent are undergraduates.

LATE HALLOWEEN? . . . This sign, and several others like it, were painted on the northeast wall of Memorial stadium. They were also seen on the walks leading to the fieldhouse on the University campus late Sunday night. The work, done by unidentified vandals, was done for no apparent reason and did not follow the general trend of feeling on the campus according to student spokesmen. Coach Bill Glassford, to whom the signs refer, will not get to see them for he will remain in Miami, Fla., for another week. Workmen began removing the signs late Monday afternoon.
