Big 7 Rules Hypocritical On Recruiting—Gardner

Jack Gardner, target of many attacks since his tenure as Kansas State head basketball coach started, has definite ideas on how to mold winning basketball teams as well as men.

Gardner is also in favor of abol-ishing the detrimental and in-herent weaknesses in basketballdom today, but opposes several of the recent actions taken by the

On the second opinion Gardner felt "this ruling is simply driving the situation under-ground instead of bringing it out into the open. Instead of coaches contacting prospects, the alumni will soon be secretly do-ing the same thing."

1. He is definitely in favor of trying out basketball players.
2. He feels that contacting basketball players is not as subversive as popular opinion deems it.

"Till be back coaching in intramurals!" He was of the opinion that the cage law makers have gone ahead without even considering what opinions the coach may have on the situation.

When asked what his thoughts were of the recent chastisement of Nebraska on the recent dispute revolving around the illegal recruiting of Stan Schaetzle and David Bell, Gardner said, "I knew Nebraska had tried them out a long time ago, but I didn't want to bring up any charges."

Gardner said reasons for Nebraska bringing charges were "We did not try to 'pour it on' Scolorado. I swept the entire bench. Knostman played only half of the game. I teach the boys to play hard no matter what the score is and most of the reserve boys were trying to look good," Gardner said.

The idea that Schaetale and Bell were given tryouts was discarded as "ridiculous." "The boys were being shown around by former Omahan, Dewey Wade. They played basketball and I saw them and talked to them for only three or four min-

"If they think I could scout the boys and tell their abilities in that ngth of time, I,m a better basketball coach than thy think I am." This sports scribe's face was-n't red from sunburn! We had been pressing charges of Gard-ner's illegal antics in the Nebraskan the past several weeks. We just had to turn the other cheek when it was revealed the Nebraska was also reprimanded for their recruiting procedures.

Gardner talked little about his team's chances for next year. He was "still worried about the ter-gible closing schedule the Wild-cat's face."

"Knostman is only a junior, but we'll be losing four seniors." But don't cry for Coach Gardner. He'll be on top a long time and as long as he's there, guys will be taking pot-shots at him.
