

Kerr To Give 'Non-Political' Speech Tonight

Sen. Robert S. Kerr, candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, will address University students in a "non-political" convocation, one of four Lincoln appearances, Wednesday.

The Oklahoma senator, his headquarters announced, will deliver the "non-political" talk, in which he will cite his record as a governor, and discuss "issues of foreign policy" and the future of young people in the tax program.

The senator's appearance at 8 p.m. in the Union ballroom is "not a political rally, but a University convocation," according to the convocations committee, sponsors of the program.

Bob LaShelle and Lynn Kunkel, student members of the committee, said: "No demonstrations will be tolerated before, during, and after the convocation on University property."

The senator's headquarters announced his itinerary for Wednesday. He will return to Omaha Wednesday from Montana. He will come to Lincoln in the afternoon, arriving at about 5 p.m.

A reception, press conference and dinner at the Lincoln hotel will precede his campus appearance. The dinner is sponsored by the Lancaster County Kerr-for-President committee.

After his program on the campus, during which he will talk and answer questions, Senator Kerr will address the Beta Beta Beta and will appear on a half-hour broadcast over radio stations KFOR and KFAB.

The Oklahoman will make a few more appearances in the state before the primary election, April 1. He will be in Omaha all day Thursday, and will spend Friday in Scottsbluff.

After appearances at two Jefferson-Jackson Day dinners, in Cheyenne, Wyo., and Salt Lake City, Utah, Senator Kerr will return to Omaha on Sunday, and remain in the state during the election.

The candidate, in discussing his accomplishments as Sooner

State governor, is expected to point to his record in education. He sponsored a program to "take Oklahoma's schools out of politics."

Under the program, he set up a non-political board of regents to govern the state's universities.

The Oklahoman, according to a "balance sheet" prepared on his position as a candidate by Life magazine, is "an orthodox New and Fair dealer, a campaigner as tireless as he is ambitious" and "favorably known probably to more state chairmen and convention delegates than any other Democrat but Truman himself."

Multimillionaire Kerr's "vulnerable target," according to Life, is the fact that he "fought with equal zeal against the civil-rights program and for his own and his state's special interests."

The appearance of Senator Kerr will precede a convocation address by another candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee who will talk to University students in the Union ballroom at 8 p.m., Monday, March 31.

Both senators will appear on the Democratic ballot in the all-University mock primary election, Monday, Mar. 31. Copies of Nebraska primary ballots, on which voters will express first and second choices for president, will be used in the election. Write-in votes will be permitted in the primary, to be sponsored by the YMCA and the YWCA.

A general meeting will be held on campus preceding the election, to stimulate "intensive publicity and campaigning for candidates."

Young Democrats for Kefauver will begin their campaign for their candidate after plans are formulated at a meeting Thursday evening. The students will make plans for publicizing Kefauver's speech in the Union ballroom Monday and for a caravan through Southeast Nebraska Monday morning.

SEN. ROBERT S. KERR will address University students Wednesday night at the Union ballroom.

Four University coeds were engaged in a discussion of their respective English courses while playing bridge one evening.

Before very long the talk took on the aspect of "I'm-not-doing-so-well—what's-wrong-with-the-instructor." One coed mentioned a recent test which had been the subject of a good deal of controversy among bridge circles.

All four were stumped on one point, and finally one coed asked, "Well, just what IS the difference between a tragic hero and a pathetic hero?"

Her partner quickly replied: "Only Stepanek knows, and he's not telling."

Ag Constitution Revision Awaits Faculty Approval

A committee of three Ag students and four Ag faculty members have completed a revision of an amendment to the Ag Executive board constitution, Wayne White, Ag Exec president announced Tuesday.

The amendment, which deals with representation to the board, will go into effect this spring or next fall, pending approval by a faculty sub-committee on student organizations.

According to White, after the new board has been established, it is planned that it will include Coll-Agri-Fun and Farmers Fair in its annual activities.

Ag students voted in favor of the amendment at a general election held last spring, but it was not passed by the faculty committee. The revision of the amendment is similar to the original, and will not require another student vote.

White said that an Ag "Bull Session" will be held Wednesday, April 2, at 7:30 p.m., to discuss the amendment. He urged Ag students to attend the "Bull Session," because it will give them an opportunity to say how Ag college should be governed, and will give them a chance to discuss it openly before it is presented to the faculty committee.

The new amendment provides for representation to the Ag Exec board through departmental clubs, religious organizations and honorary organizations.

The Ag college Student Council representatives, one man and one woman, elected in the spring of their sophomore year by Ag students, will be the only members of the Ag Exec board elected at a general election. One representative will be elected from each of the following organizations with the exception of Home Economics club, which shall have two:

Block and Bridle club, Tri-Klub, Varsity Dairy club, Soil Conservation society, Agricultural Economics club, University 4-H club, Home Economics club, Vocational Agriculture club, Ag YMCA, Ag YWCA, Alpha Zeta and Phi Upsilon Omicron.

Three ex-officio, non-voting members shall be president of Ag Builders, editor of Cornhusker Countryman and chairman of the Ag Union board.

Three hold-over members, at least one man and one woman, will be elected by the Ag Exec board at the first regular meeting in May, to serve the following year.

Two faculty advisers, one man and one woman, will be appointed by the Dean of the College of Agriculture.

Any club or organization desiring representation may submit a written application to the Ag Exec board by the first regular meeting in April. This application must be submitted no less than two years after the organization's constitution has been approved by the Ag Exec board, the Student Council and committee on student affairs.

The Ag Exec board must approve this application by two-thirds vote of its total membership.

Organizations entitled to representation shall elect its representative at the first regular meeting in May.

Students who worked on the revision of the amendment were Alice Anderson, Clayton Yeutter and Wayne White. Faculty members were Miss Mary Guthrie, Dr. Ruth Staples, David Sander and Ralston Graham.

Truce Talks Remain Secret

KOREA—The Korean truce talks were still shrouded in a veil of secrecy imposed by the delegates at Panmunjom.

The issue under discussion is presumably that of prisoner exchange. At last report no compromise had been worked out. The communists still demanded forced repatriation and UN negotiators insisted that the prisoners be allowed to decide for themselves whether or not they wish to return to their side of the line.

Wilson, Labor Unions Open Battle

WASHINGTON — Pointed comments flew thick and fast between the members of the wage stabilization board, chief mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, and representatives of labor unions.

Three industry members of the wage board said the board itself should go out of existence because it defeats its own purpose, that of holding down inflation. George Armstrong, Dwight Steele and Milton Olander said the wage board, of which they are members, recommended concessions to the unions which exceeded

'STREET SCENE' OPENING

Marian Uhe's Acting Highlights 'Generally Weak' Play Tuesday

By DICK MILLER
Staff Reviewer

The University theater production of Elmer Rice's "Street Scene" Tuesday night was highlighted by a few very fine actors in a generally weak and ineffective play. Besides being sadly outdated, the play was full of cliches which, though sentimental and universal, are still not the stuff of which good theater is made.

Marian Uhe, as Rose, gave the evening's most alive and most convincing performance. Besides bringing a naturalness and appeal to her part, Miss Uhe was able to make some of her most ridiculous lines sound convincing. Her performance was most satisfactory.

Mary Sidner, as her mother, seemed to be weak in comparison, although she had, in her scenes with her husband, a more polished character than at other times. Les Mathis grew steadily in his role throughout the evening, and Ken Clement gave a capable performance of a part which offered almost nothing to work with.

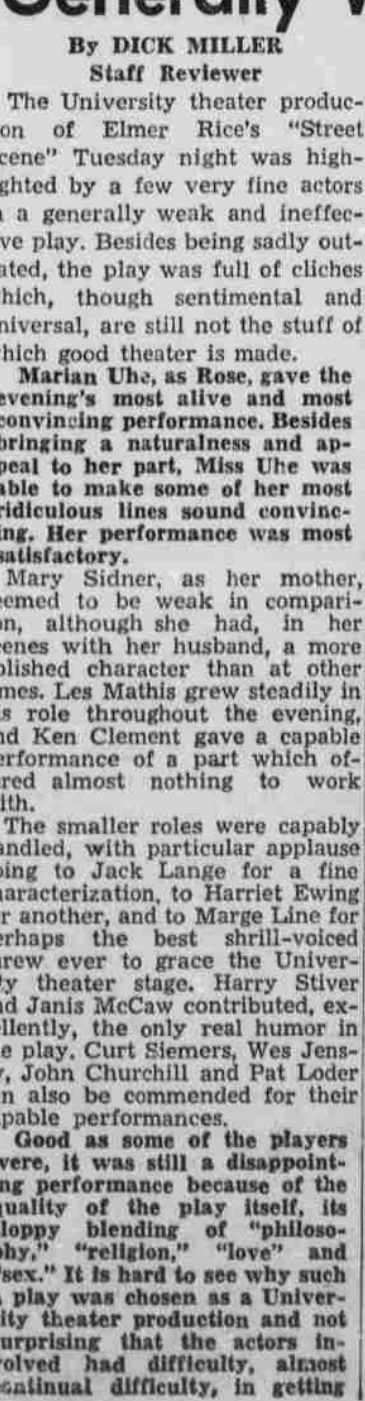

The smaller roles were capably handled, with particular applause going to Jack Lange for a fine characterization, to Harriet Ewing for another, and to Marge Line for perhaps the best shrill-voiced shrew ever to grace the University theater stage. Harry Stiver and Janis McCaw contributed, excellently, the only real humor in the play. Curt Siemers, Wes Jensen, John Churchill and Pat Loder can also be commended for their capable performances.

Good as some of the players were, it was still a disappointing performance because of the quality of the play itself, its sloppy blending of "philosophy," "religion," "love" and "sex." It is hard to see why such a play was chosen as a University theater production and not surprising that the actors involved had difficulty, almost continual difficulty, in getting even the smallest amount of conviction or art into their performances.

The technical work on the production was excellent and the set was another in the fine series seen on the University theater stage this season.
