

Orchesis Tryouts Set For Wednesday Night

UP—ONE, TWO, THREE! DOWN—ONE, TWO, THREE! Sounds like reducing exercises by an unusually enthusiastic group. In reality, counting and bending are part of Orchesis' modern-dance rehearsing. Tryouts are Wednesday evening, and prospective members should know what they are getting in for. The modern dance is slimming, interesting, slimming, healthful, slimming, and an expression of self just as painting. Orchesis presented a dance of the four seasons at last year's spring recital and members are shown rehearsing at the right. The first picture shows (l. to r.) Mimi DuTeau, Barbara Bell, Ting Lilly and Charlene Katz smiling at their rehearsal audience. Portraying a mood in the second picture are: (l. to r.) Dee Irwin, Lois Olson and Shirley Sidles. Demonstration of precision in practice are: (l. to r.) Sally Sveska, Kathy McMullen, Wanda Jotts and Georgia Hulac. Susan Sveska glances approvingly at the practice. (Daily Nebraskan photos.)

Tryouts for Orchesis, women's modern dance group, will be held at 7:15 p.m. Wednesday in the dance studio in Grant Memorial Hall.

This Wednesday's session will be judged and the dancing experience of the applicants will be evaluated.

and a spring recital. Each organized house is invited to submit a modern dance number for the Christmas program. The numbers are judged by the dance group and a limited number are selected to participate.

Male Students Encouraged To Participate In Orchesis

A new way to "stay in shape" is being offered to university men. Orchesis, modern dance organization, is again opening its activities to men. It isn't easy, but students won't get any more aches and pains trying to stay in shape by taking modern dance than they will by workouts of other kinds.

Meeting time for the men's group has been set for 4 p.m. Monday, but it can be changed to suit the convenience of the group.

The presentation of a dance concert involves countless hours of practice. Timing of the leaps, falls and bends must be perfect. Costuming appropriate to the theme of the concert must be provided for.
