

NU Students To Donate To Gamma Globulin Pool

By MARIANNE HANSEN Staff Writer

Science marches on. It's latest step forward is the development of a blood derivative which was scientifically demonstrated as an effective preventative for polio for the first time last year.

The new serum, gamma globulin, is a tongue-twister but a life-saver. Although it is not an established cure for polio, it will prevent or lessen paralysis if administered in time. With polio cases at a new high of 55,000 last year, the introduction of gamma globulin is the brightest hope in the fight against this world-wide crippler.

Because of production difficulties and equipment priorities, the supply of gamma globulin is extremely limited. Only making the serum and production of a fully processed and tested batch takes about three months by the present process. The processing firms are striving to step up their production; but, according to Red Cross doctors, the supply ready in time for the polio season next summer will not be very great.

Only one million doses of the precious substance are expected to be available for a nation with 43 million children. In order to provide the maximum supply possible, the American Red Cross is planning to place in a national pool all the gamma globulin received from commercial sources and Red Cross military and National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis supplies. The Office of Defense Mobilization will then distribute supplies in the pool to polio epidemic areas free of charge. Rigid control of distribution is necessary, however, as it is impossible to produce enough gamma globulin to give shots to all individuals susceptible to the polio threat.

The effectiveness of gamma

'Hatless' Foltz Gets A 10-Gallon Stetson

By DICK COFFEY Feature Editor

He never wears a hat. David Foltz, chairman of the school of music, finally has a hat. One of Mexico's finest 10-gallon Stetsons was presented to him at the State Music Educators' Convention in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Foltz directed a choral group selected from high schools in New Mexico. The convention was held on the University of New Mexico's campus, Jan. 29, 30 and 31.

When Foltz arrived at the New Mexico campus, he was not recognized as being a choral director. The University of New Mexico's faculty, evidently thought of a choral director as being a bearded old man in his seventies with a hat.

The president of the University expressed his appreciation to the University of Nebraska for letting Foltz come to the convention. Their faculty thought they could help the University by giving Foltz a hat.

After the concert, the chorus presented Foltz with the 10-gallon Stetson.

The University of Nebraska faculty of the school of music discussed the hat, and went on record as appreciating the gesture of the University of New Mexico.

FINALLY GETS HAT . . . David Foltz, chairman of the School of Music, examines his new 10-gallon Stetson. Foltz recently received this hat, while directing a choral group in a New Mexico music convention.

The funds received from the levy would be used for building purposes for construction of added library facilities.

Librarian Charles Dalrymple told trustees that the space shortage problem had become so acute that in order to assimilate new books at the rate of about 10,000 per year almost an equal number of books had to be discarded before their useful service life was terminated.
