AWS Schedules Open Workshops

Women students will be able to express their views on living rules, the point system and University standards at an Associated Women Students Workshop Tuesday evening, May 5.

All women are invited. For the first time, the AWS board is holding a workshop to attempt to find out coeds' opinions on these issues. The workshop will begin at 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom with a general meeting. After introduction of delegates, Frank M. Hallgren, assistant dean of student affairs, will give a brief talk. At 7:30, the group will be divided into three parts. The three sections will reconvene at 8:30 p.m. for workshop reports.

Each organized women's house is being asked to send its president plus three official delegates—one for each workshop discussion group. These delegates, AWS officers said, should be able to present the majority opinion of the groups they represent.

According to Janet Steffen, AWS president, and Shirley Murphy, vice president, several Associated Women Students groups on other campuses hold similar workshops. After the two attended AWS convention at Ohio State University during Easter vacation, they decided to make a definite effort to obtain general opinion on functions of AWS.

Miss Murphy said the University of Alabama has an almost identical workshop session each fall.

Coeds and faculty members who have suggestions or opinions on the AWS living rules and regulations may attend a discussion group led by Miss Murphy, Miss Elsie Jevons, AWS adviser and assistant professor of commercial arts, will be adviser for the rules discussion group. Joyce Bennington, AWS board member, will be secretary.

Complaints and suggestions for the point system may be aired at a second discussion meeting, led by Nancy Hemphill, chairman of the point system for the AWS Board. Adviser will be Miss Mary Jean Mulvaney, AWS adviser and instructor in physical education, and Martha Payne, AWS board member, will act as secretary.

The third discussion group will concern standards on the campus. Sue Brownlee, AWS senior board member, will have charge of the discussion. She will be assisted by Miss Mary Augustine, assistant dean of women. Eileen Mullarky, AWS board member, will be secretary.

At the close of the discussion sessions, the secretaries will make brief reports at a general meeting.

RELUCTANT VOLUNTEER . . . Norman Scott, senior in the College of Engineering, looks somewhat dubious as half a million volts of high frequency electricity are applied to him in the electric chair—one of the Engineer's Open House displays. Demonstrating that the voltage is present, John Whitlock, senior in the College of Engineering (left), touches Scott with a wand illuminated by the tremendous voltage. Curtis Sorenson, one of the three students erecting the display, administers the controls. Actually Scott has nothing to fear, for the voltage applied to his body as in the case of the power transformers.
