'Stockholm Similar To San Francisco' Says Swedish Geography Professor

Communism Not Discussed In Sweden As In US

"The number of University students here" is amazing, Gunnar Alexandersson, visiting geography professor from Sweden, said, when comparing our University with those of his native country.

In Sweden, he said that there are approximately as many students in all the Universities as there are here in our own University.

THE SWEDISH school system is very selective, Alexandersson noted. For example, only 200 students per year are accepted into the School of Economics. In order to qualify, students must pass entrance exams taken at the ages of 18 or 20. After passing the exams, a student may go to any University in Sweden.

In order to attend the Universities, three languages must be known. The text books used there are all printed in German, French and English, even though Swedish is the native language.

MORE THAN 80 per cent of the people of Sweden live in apartments, Alexandersson said. Stockholm has more than a million inhabitants, and is quite a bit like our own American city San Francisco, except that Stockholm is not spread out as much as San Francisco. Alexandersson commented on the number of cars that we have here, and said that of all countries that he has visited, Sweden is the most like the United States.

HE HAS traveled widely in Europe and said that it is very difficult to teach geography if you haven't seen many places and observed their various cultures.

Alexandersson said that communism is not talked about nearly so much in Sweden, and that it ceased to be an issue of importance a short time after the war. He said that people in Europe watch the publicity on Sen. McCarthy with much interest, and that he is a great topic of interest to those people.

ALEXANDERSSON will serve at the University for a year, and then will return to Sweden to rejoin his wife who is a teacher in Stockholm.

This is his second trip to the United States; he was here from March to December of last year, and he made two trips across the continent during that time. While here previously, sponsored by a fellowship from the School of Economics at Stockholm University, he spent two months doing research in Washington, D.C.
